About 1895 or 1896-the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] ought to know, for he was here at the time-Congress passed a law prohibiting the transportation of lottery tickets by carriers of interstate commerce. A law had already been passed excluding them from the mails under the post-office and post-roads clause. But it was not effective for the simple reason that the lottery companies used the express companies to scatter the lottery tickets throughout the country.

A law was passed-and I have here the debates upon the subject-prohibiting the transportation of lottery tickets by carriers of interstate commerce. None of the other laws that have been passed-and I shall at length call the attention of the Senate to such laws now on the statute books-have been questioned so far as their constitutionality is concerned, even though they are the laws definitely prohibiting the transportation of articles by carriers of interstate commerce; for in those cases no great industry and no great business was profiting by the business in the thing prohibited.

But in the Lottery case there was an immense institution, richly profiting by that business.

The law was very fiercely resisted. I think, with the exception of the Legal Tender cases, the Dartmouth College case, Gibbons v. Ogden, and McCulloch v. Maryland, there never have been any cases in the Supreme Court which were more ably conducted before that great tribunal, or with more desperate determination, or with greater learning than the Lottery case.

Not only did the attorneys employed by the lottery companies see their clients' interest in preserving their unholy business, but the attorneys employed, who were very able men indeed. saw the tremendous scope of the decision upon the question there raised. They understood thoroughly that the Supreme Court's decision would be as epochal as in McCulloch v. Maryland-that it would make history

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BEVERIDGE, Gladly.
Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator, of course, understands that I am decidedly favorable to his bill, and it is because I wish to have removed this wall of doubt that has surrounded me all the time as to our constitutional power to enact the legislation which the Senator is so earnestly supporting that I venture these suggestions.

Were not all of those cases to which the Senator refers cases in which the commodity was held practically not to be a commercial commodity-commodities the use of which were declared to be against public policy, or the dissemination of which would be against the interests of the people?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understand the Senator's point. Mr. McCUMBER. The reason I ask the question is this: I have always understood that under the privilege and immunity clause of the Constitution every person had an inherent right to go from one State to another himself and had a right to bring any property that he possessed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I interrupt the Senator? The right to which the Senator refers, the right to go from one part of the Republic to another, does not flow from any provision of the Constitution. That was directly decided in Crandall v. Nevada, where seven judges decided that it was an inherent right of citizenship, depending on no clause of the Constitution whatever, and two judges that it was a matter of interstate commerce.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have read that decision. It is an inherent right the exercise of which Congress itself could not I want to call the Senator's attention to six lines in a text-book upon the subject by E. P. Prentice and J. G. Egar on the Commercial Clause of the Federal Constitution.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I gladly yield. Mr. McQUMBER. The authors state the general rule bearing upon the right of Congress itself to make a prohibition against interstate commerce, and draw the distinction between the powers as relating to interstate commerce and the powers of Congress over foreign commerce. In treating of this the authors state-

Over interstate commerce no such extensive authority has been claimed. The right to engage in such commerce is one of the rights reserved to the people and one of the privileges and immunities of citizenship. Congress can not lay an embargo upon interstate commerce—

I call the Senator's attention especially to this, because I understood him to state that Congress could lay an embargo upon interstate commerce.

Congress can not lay an embargo upon interstate commerce, nor can in national matters, make restrictions of unequal operation among the States. The purpose with which the grant was made—to secure freedom of transportation throughout the country unembarrassed by differing regulations at State lines—measures not only the power of the States, but also the power of Congress.

That is given as the rule, after reciting a number of authorities upon the subject. I quote it to the Senator that he may meet it directly in his argument.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am very much obliged to the Senator, He asked me a question and then submitted to me a proposition from Prentice's text-book. I will answer his question now and take up the proposition when I come to that branch of my argument.

In the first place, the Senator asked me whether, in the Lottery case, as well as in the other cases, it was not held that these subjects excluded from interstate commerce were not in their nature not properly subjects of commerce. Now, in answer to that, I say on the contrary they were definitely declared to be subjects of commerce, otherwise no jurisdiction could have been acquired over them.

It was contended in the Lottery case that the law of Congress was void for two reasons. One was that lottery tickets were not subjects of commerce any more than insurance policies are and that therefore the case of Paul v. Virginia decided the lottery-ticket question at its inception. Because, of course, if lottery tickets were not subjects of commerce, then Congress had no power to pass laws excluding them from interstate commerce. So the court said upon that point:

We are of opinion that lottery tickets are subjects of traffic and therefore are subjects of commerce, and the regulation of the carriage of such tickets from State to State, at least by independent carriers, is a regulation of commerce among the several States.

Of course that was held in the Forty-three Gallons of Whisky case. Whisky is a subject of commerce. It was so held in Leisy

v. Hardin and in the Rahrer case.

I think the Senator's question has also another meaning, which involves not so much the question of power as it involves the question of policy; and that is this-the Senator can corme if I do not state what was in his mind-when any article of commerce becomes so adulterated by the circumstances of its manufacture, or because of its actual and inherent evil, or for any other reason affects injuriously the welfare of the people, then not only Congress in passing the law as a matter of policy, but the courts in upholding the law as a matter of power will take that into consideration. Am I right?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is right; but I can easily see a distinction between that class of commodities and a class of commodities such as grain, etc., which may be raised upon my farm and some work in connection with which may be performed by a child under 10 years of age. I would admit the right of Congress in the one instance, but I confess I have great doubt in the other, unless the Senator is able to make it clear

Mr. BEVERIDGE. As a question of policy, not power?

Mr. McCUMBER. As a question of power.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It becomes a question, the Supreme Court says-and I have read two or three decisions, and I hope the Senator listened to them—to be left to the legislative discretion. But taking it from the point of view the Senator suggests, there is more harm to the interests of the Nation, and that phrase "interests of the Nation," I think, has been repeated in every one of these decisions-it was first used by Chief Justice Marshall in McCulloch v. Maryland—and that phrase the "interests of the Nation" has been the most powerful phrase in the inter-pretation of the Constitution. The "interests of the Nation" are more greatly imperiled by the products of child labor than even by diseased meat or adulterated food. Nobody doubts, and I think I shall prove to the satisfaction of everybody who hears me or who reads my remarks or cares anything about this subject, that we have the right to prohibit from interstate commerce convict-made goods. But I will come to that in a moment.

Answering the Senator's question from the legal point of view, I say certainly. Lottery tickets were decided to be subjects of commerce, legitimate subjects of commerce, just as whisky was decided to be, and it was upon that ground that the court acquired jurisdiction.

THE RIGHT TO "PROHIBIT."

The other ground upon which that law was resisted was that Congress had no right to prohibit. I call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to that. Their contention was exactly what was in the Senator's mind a moment ago, when he said that the only power confided in Congress was the power to regulate, and that the power to regulate did not involve the power to prohibit; and that therefore the law of Congress excruding lottery tickets from interstate commerce was not within the constitutional power of Congress.

Now, in an opinion which of course has become historic and which is so familiar to every lawyer here, I take it, that I hardly feel like taking the time to read it, but will do so on account of its importance, the court held that the power to regulate com-merce does not include the power to prohibit specified articles from commerce; and I shall read from the opinion of the court:

But it is said that the statute in question does not regulate the carrying of lottery tickets from State to State, but by punishing those who cause them to be so carried Congress in effect prohibits such carrying; that in respect of the carrying from one State to another of articles or things that are, in fact or according to usage in business, the subjects of commerce, the authority given Congress was not to prohibit, but only to reconstitute. to regulate.

Is not that what the Senator from Rhode Island said a moment ago? That was the argument which the court says was made. It might have been the Senator from Rhode Island himself who made the argument for the lottery people, according to the Supreme Court's report of that argument, for it is in exact and identical words the argument of the Senator from Rhode Island against this child-labor bill. This is the opinion of the court.

The Supreme Court continues:

It is to be remarked that the Constitution does not define what is to It is to be remarked that the Constitution does not define what is to be deemed a legitimate regulation of Interstate commerce. In Gibbons v. Ogden it was said that the power to regulate such commerce is the power to prescribe the rule by which it is to be governed. But this general observation leaves it to be determined, when the question comes before the court, whether Congress in prescribing a particular rule has exceeded its power under the Constitution.

While our Government must be acknowledged by all to be one of enumerated powers, McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat., 316, 405, 407), the Constitution does not attempt to set forth all the means by which such powers may be carried into execution. It leaves to Congress a large discretion as to the means that may be employed in executing a given power.

We have said that the carrying from State to State of lottery tickets constitutes interstate commerce, and that the regulation of such commerce is within the power of Congress under the Constitution. Are we prepared to say that a provision which is in effect a prohibition of the carriage of such articles from State to State is not a fit or appropriate mode for the regulation of that particular kind of commerce? If lottery traffic, carried on through interstate commerce, is a matter of which Congress may take cognizance—

The extent of our discretion is with us, I will say to the Senator from Tennessee-and over which its power may be exerted, can it be possible that it must tolerate the traffic, and simply regulate the manner in which it may be carried on? Or may not Congress, for the protection of the people of all the States, and under the power to regulate interstate commerce, devise such means, within the scope of the Constitution, and not prohibited by it, as will drive that traffic out of commerce among the States?

Could there be a more direct and emphatic answer to the question that was in the mind of the Senator from Rhode Island? The court continues:

In determining whether regulation may not under some circumstances properly take the form or have the effect of prohibition the nature of the interstate traffic which it was sought by the act of May 2, 1895, to suppress can not be overlooked. When enacting that statute Congress no doubt shared the views upon the subject of lotteries heretofore expressed by this court.

If a State, when considering legislation for the suppression of lotterles within its own limits, may properly take into view the evils that inhere in the raising of money in that mode, why may not Congress, invested with the power to regulate commerce among the several States, provide that such commerce shall not be polluted by the carrying of lottery tickets from one State to another?

I ask any Senator here whether he doubts that a State may pass a law excluding from intrastate commerce (commerce exclusively within the State itself) the products of child labor? Does the Senator from Rhode Island deny that power? Does any Senator deny that power?

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly. Did the Senator from Rhode Island understand my question?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think so. On the point the Senator was discussing the court evidently did not understand the lottery case to have the significance which the Senator is giving it. because in another case which they decided later they used the language I will read. After having quoted the lottery-case decision the court say:

Whatever difference of opinion, if any, may have existed, or does exist, concerning the limitations of power so far as interstate commerce is concerned, it is not denied that from the beginning Congress has exercised a plenary power in respect to the exclusion of merchandise brought from foreign countries.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator is on the subject that he raised last night, and to that I will come, to the Senator's satisfaction, in a moment. I am not arguing that now. I am reading the decision of the Supreme Court in the lottery case on the subject of prohibiting commerce in an article. I am asking the Senator and I am asking every other Senator this question. Before proceeding further I will read it again:

If a State, when considering legislation for the suppression of lot-teries within its own limits, may properly take into view the evils that inhere in the raising of money in that mode, why may not Congress, invested with the power to regulate commerce among the several States, provide that such commerce shall not be polluted by the carrying of lottery tickets from one State to another?

I ask any Senator this question: Does anybody deny that a State can pass a law which shall exclude from transportation within its own limits child-made goods made within its own

Mr. FULTON Will the Senator allow me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator if the lottery case-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; pardon me just a moment.

Well, I

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Was the Senator going to answer the

I was going to answer it by putting another. Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I want a direct answer. I want to make an argument upon it for a moment.

Mr. FULTON. I am not under any obligation to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course you are not, and I am not under any obligation to yield.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator asked a question. If he chooses to withdraw it, I will not ask the Senator the question I had intended to ask

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Go on.

Mr. FULTON. I will ask the Senator if he does not observe that the lottery case and the whisky case and all the cases cited have this element in them: The exclusion of the articles amounts to a regulation of commerce in that it withdraws from commerce things that are deleterious to the people to whom they are shipped?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.
Mr. FULTON. The articles were not allowed to be used for that purpose. Is there not a vast distinction between that and simply refusing to allow to be transported in interstate commerce an article, against which no charge of that character can be made, merely because some particular character of labor has been employed in making it? In other words, in one case you regulate commerce, and in the other case you are regulating the employment of labor in a State.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator rose to ask a question. He did not only ask a question, but he made quite a statement. a question of policy, I recognize the distinction. As a question of power, as a matter of pure logic, I personally do not. But I do not intend in any argument of this question—

Mr. FULTON rose.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No, in a moment, I want to dispose of the question I am on now.

I do not intend to be confined to that narrow ground. I intend to take the ground, and have taken it, although I could take the much wider one if I chose, that wherever any article affects for ill "the interests of the Nation," to use the famous phrase of John Marshall, which is repeated in nearly every one of these decisions, where from its adulteration, from the circumstance of its manufacture, from any other circumstance Congress, representing the people, thinks it is bad for the Nation, it may be excluded from interstate commerce under the commerce clause of the Constitution.

Now, I am going to read again what I read from this lottery decision, and again ask a question, and if there is no answer, then I am going to state the conclusion.

If a State, when considering legislation for the suppression of lotterles within its own limits, may properly take into view the evils that inhere in the raising of money in that mode, why may not Congress, invested with the power to regulate commerce among the several States, provide that such commerce shall not be polluted by the carrying of lottery tickets from one State to another?

Will any Senator say that a State has no power to pass a law excluding from transportation within its own limits child-made goods made within its own limits? Certainly not.

The most rabid opponent of this bill would not say that. Therefore, according to the passage I have just read from the decision of the Supreme Court in the Lottery Cases, when it comes to a question of interstate traffic, Congress has power over that as plenary as the State has over the product within its own borders.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly. Mr. TILLMAN. It seems to me the Senator is crossing a very attenuated bridge to reach his point. If a State wants to regulate child labor, it has plenary power under its police power to pass any law it sees fit, and it is inconceivable that a State would undertake to pass a law such as the Senator says it might pass, because it can go at the remedy so much more directly and so much more effectively. When the Senator undertakes to draw a deduction that Congress can do this thing because a State can do it, it is absurd, because the State would never think of doing it in that way. It would do it in the other way, the substantial way, the common-sense way, the direct way, the

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Tillman way.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is right, if you choose to apply it. Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, what I say to the Senator from South Carolina I say kindly, for I know his earnest desire to end this very great evil, which he has described more vividly than I have, and he has expressed to me personally and in public his desire to hear what was said upon the legal proposition. I notified him this morning that the subject was going to be gone into by direct decisions. Now, the Senator goes out a large part of the time.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator has not been absent at all. I beg the Senator's pardon. He has been right here listening. The Senator from Indiana is always telling us that he is going to get to the point directly, but he never gets there [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, that is a remark calculated, of course, to amuse the galleries. Does the Senator think that the language of Justice Harlan in the Lottery case, where he says it is within the power of Congress to exclude lottery tickets from interstate commerce, where it involves the power of prohibition, is not to the point?

Mr. TILLMAN. I have never read the Lottery case, because I have never had anything to do with these legal technicalities. know the common-sense proposition that because a State might do a thing is no reason why the United States has power to do the thing

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator is no monopolist of the common sense on this floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not claim to be. I think that would be a preposterous supposition when the Senator from Indiana is on [Laughter.]

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I thank the Senator from South Carolina. Now, I read further from the Lottery case. If the Senator of course does not think that the decision of the Supreme Court which says that Congress has the power to regulate commerce, to prohibit commerce in certain articles—

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. CARMACK. Does the Senator understand that opinion to go to the extent of saying that whatever a State may do in regulating commerce within its borders the General Government may do in regulating commerce among the States?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; but there are several other cases which do say just that, and it was said not less than a hundred times in the interstate-commerce debate on the passage of the rate bill last year. It comes so near it that I will again read it, and the Senator can see for himself.

Mr. CARMACK. I do not think it says that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. As I said yesterday, a Senator, like any Convinced against his will, Is of the same opinion still.

But hear the Supreme Court. Why are Senators so impatient with the Supreme Court? That tribunal goes on:

Why may not Congress, invested with the power to regulate commerce among the several States—

POLICE POWER OF STATE AND COMMERCE POWER OF NATION.

Do the same thing? The same thing that a State can do with commerce within that State? That is the question the Supreme Court asks—yes, and decides. For example, the same argument could have been made—and I have looked through the debates and I have them here—on the antilottery law. The late Senator from Missouri, Mr. Vest, whose brilliant intellect still illumines this Chamber, at first thought he would resist it on constitutional grounds, but he did not.

It could as well be said that it was the province of a State to pass laws protecting their people from the evil of lotteries, as many of the States do, just as many of the States have passed laws against child labor, some effective, some ineffective, some grotesque; and some States have not passed a law at all.

It might as well be said, and it was said, that it was a part of ne "police power of the State"—a term which is abused so much—as for the States to pass laws for protecting their citizens from the evils of lottery tickets. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that one of the most powerful arguments made before the Supreme Court in the Lottery Case was that the power to suppress the transmission of lottery tickets, the power to save a State's people from the moral evil involved in that, was a "police power of the State," and something which the Federal Government had no right to interfere with.

Mr. TILLMAN rose.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Pardon me a moment. Nobody denied that that was the case; but the Supreme Court said that this was not the only method of reaching that evil. It is true that it is within the "police power" of a State to pass a law suppressing lotteries or the sale of lottery tickets for the saving of the morals of its people.

But it is also true that the National Government, under the power confided in it under the interstate-commerce clause, has power to exclude from interstate commerce and prohibit the transmission by interstate carriers of lottery tickets.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from South Carolina? Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator see no difference between the suppression of gambling, so to speak, which the Lottery case involves, and the suppression of an evil which everyone acknowledges child labor to be? Can be see no difference in the regulation of the two? The Senator's bill proposes that we shall kill the evil involved in child labor by prohibiting the products from being transported in interstate commerce.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; I say

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator see no difference between that and suppressing gambling in lottery tickets by not having them distributed all over the country?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. To use the language the Senator so often employs, to give the Senator a "common sense" answer, void of "technicality," there is as much difference between the one and the other as there is between gambling and murder, because lottery tickets involve gambling and the poisoning of the people's morals, and I have shown here by sworn testimony that child labor involves murder and murder knowingly committed.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is the "common sense" answer to it. Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator contend that Congress can prohibit murder in a State?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly not.

TILLMAN. Then the Senator answers himself.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator wants me to answer my own questions, very well. If the Senator is satisfied, I am.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Congress has no power to prohibit murder directly why should the Congress have the power to prohibit murder indirectly by prohibiting child labor, or the abuses of child labor?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will show the Senator by statutes upon which he himself has voted in a few moments.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will allow me a moment—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly. But may I interrupt the Senator a moment before he asks me a question? Does the Senator from South Carolina think that Congress can pass a law prohibiting gambling in the States?

Mr. TILLMAN. Ordinary gambling?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, gambling in the States. Of course I do not know

Mr. TILLMAN. I am very anxious to have Congress or somebody else pass a law to prohibit the gamblers in Wall street, who are stealing our cotton-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. This is not a humorous discussion.

Mr. TILLMAN. And to stop the dealing in futures. I should like to see something done along that line.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. This is not a humorous discussion.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not making any humor. Senator I was never more in dead earnest in my life.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator says it is perfectly competent for Congress to exclude lottery tickets from the mail and thus suppress gambling. And he asked me whether or not Congress has power to prevent murder in a State. I say "No."

Now, I ask the Senator, Has Congress power to prevent gambling in a State? Certainly not. I do not expect the Senator to say it has; but the Senator has just admitted that we have power and have exercised it in the lottery cases to indirectly prevent gambling in a State. Now I will hear the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. TILLMAN. The antilottery law business prevented the evil of gambling in one State from being spread all over from

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Indiana is discussing in perfect good faith and ability a question which, to my mind, is very vital to the people of the United States. I understand he predicates his argument (if I am wrong about that he will correct me) upon the proposition that Congress has absolutely unlimited power over interstate commerce. Am I right?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The power of Congress over interstate commerce is as great as its power over commerce among the Indian tribes or with foreign nations.

Mr. SPOONER. That is only quoting the language of the . constitutional provision, but that does not answer my question. The Senator will pardon me. The Senator said yesterday (and I ventured to ask him a question, because I respect him and desired his view about it) that it is in the power of Congress under the commerce clause to prohibit at its will the transportation of any article from State to State or to foreign countries. Is that the Senator's position?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will answer the Senator not indirectly, but I will answer him directly in two ways.

Mr. SPOONER. I simply wish to bring that to the attention of the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. First, then, my own personal view: The question is much broader than this bill justifies, and that is the reason why I am going to answer your question in two ways.

My own personal view upon the question of power exclusively is that the power of Congress is that broad, and that it is a question of policy over what articles we will exercise it. shall try to illustrate that in a moment. In answering thus I am answering the Senator quite as broadly as his question.

But the Senator's question is broader than this particular bill under discussion makes necessary, and therefore I will only answer, as to the second answer, as broadly as the present bill does justify. It is not necessary for me to make a broader answer than the bill itself calls for. I am not going to have a straw man, or what the Senator may think is a straw man that is, my personal views about the scope of my power-erected to be knocked down by anybody.

So I give the Senator my second portion of the answer, as follows: That even if I am wrong in my first, which is, as I think, supported by numerous decisions of the Supreme Court, there can be no question that I am right in this very limited view at least, that we have the unquestioned power to exclude from interstate commerce any article which, in our judgment, is deleterious to the people of the United States, whether it be by reason of its unhealthfulness, whether it be by reason of its supposed effect upon the morals of the people, or whether it be by reason of a circumstance of its manufacture which is hurtful to the American people—which, to use the phrase most often used in all these cases, is inimical to the "interests of the nation." Now, I have answered the Senator's question.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, Mr. President, if my interruption is not agreeable to the Senator

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is welcome. Mr. SPOONER. The Senator has answered the question fully and frankly and from two different standpoints. Of course, suppose there is no one in this Chamber who is not opposed to child labor. It is withering-that is a good word for it-the mental and physical faculties of the young, who are to be the governing body of this country. Not differing at all with the Senator in his denunciation of child labor or in his declaration in which there is very much truth—that the States have not adequately dealt with it, my trouble is in the power of the Federal Government to regulate it. I suppose the Senator would admit that it is entirely incompetent for Congress to constitutionally enact a law in terms regulating child labor in the States. That is not debatable, I take it, by anyone. So the Senator is obliged to fall back upon the commerce clause of the Constitution to enable the thing to be done, Congress to accomplish by indirect means what confessedly it can not constitutionally accomplish by direct means.

Now, the Senator says, first-I did not mean to make a speech

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Go ahead.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator says, first-and I think he has to say, although the distinction which he draws has force so far as the decision in the lottery case goes, that Congress has unlimited power over interstate commerce, and it may say who shall engage in interstate commerce, and it may say who shall It may say what articles can be transported from State to State, from the State of production to the State of sale or to a foreign country.

Now, Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator, apart from the decision upon which he relies, if the word "regulate" does not of necessity involve the continued existence of the thing to be regulated, whether it does not in terms inherently exclude the power to destroy; in other words, to prohibit, and if, taking the Senator's first proposition—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator is putting a good many questions to me, of course.

Mr. SPOONER. No; I do not. On the first proposition made by the Senator, is it not true that Congress can prohibit the transportation of an innocuous commodity and a necessary one from State to State because in the State of production it was not the product of union labor?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; under my first answer.
Mr. SPOONER. Or, Mr. President—
Mr. BEVERIDGE. But will the Senator pardon me a minute?
Mr. SPOONER. Pardon me.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Pardon me. Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I stated that abstract answer to the Sena-r. It is an abstract question, though I am perfectly willing to have the Senator consume any amount of time in questions. I said that question and the answer which it called for and which I gave were not necessary to this bill, and I proceeded to give a substantive answer, so far as this bill is concerned, which the Senator said was fair and the distinction important.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, I will get to that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. You are arguing the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. No; I am not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But I do not want to forget the question of the Senator. He is putting four or five at once.

Mr. SPOONER. No; I do not mean to do so, and I will not

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is all right, except I do not want to lose sight of it in my mind.

Mr. SPOONER. No; the Senator will not lose sight of any-I will pay him that tribute.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I could not lose sight of the Senator. Mr. SPOONER. So, on the Senator's theory, Congress may prohibit transportation from State to State of any article in the production of which eight hours a day was not in vogue in the labor which produced it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I personally think that, I will say to the Senator; but I will state that under this bill that case can not be debated at all.

Mr. SPOONER. I will get to that in a minute.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, go ahead. Mr. SPOONER. Under that theory, is it not true that the power given by the Constitution to Congress to regulate commerce for the purpose of keeping the channels of commerce free and unobstructed is prostituted into a construction which warrants the General Government itself to obstruct the channels of commerce?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator ask me that question? Mr. SPOONER. No; in just a minute. Now, Mr. President, I come to the second branch. I make the suggestion, and I want to hear the Senator on it; that is all.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not want to forget. Mr. SPOONER. The Senator forgets nothing.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is very kind, but I do not want to run the risk. I do not want to let the Senator kill me with compliments until I run the risk of forgetting his questions.

Mr. SPOONER. Now I come to the second proposition. the power to regulate commerce involves the power to prohibit commerce when, in the judgment of Congress, there is involved the habits or the morals of the people, what limit is there to the power? Where Congress has the power—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; that question, I will say to the Senator, when that particular branch of the argument is reached, I want to take up logically to answer most fully. It simply involves the ancient argument that has been made every time a case of this kind has gone to the Supreme Court, and that is so easily made, that because a power may be exercised abusively, absurdly, grotesquely, and ruinously, if it is admitted to exist at all, therefore it does not exist. That is no new argument. The Supreme Court has decided time and again that the abuse of power does not argue against its existence. Does the Senator deny that?

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator now puts me a question-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; I do.
Mr. SPOONER. Which I will not forget to answer. The power of taxation under the Constitution is without limit except as to uniformity. When Congress, as in the oleomargarine case and some others, exercised that power, the Supreme Court sustained it, because where a power is given to Congress the discretion, the wisdom of Congress in its exercise is not subject to judicial review.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is quite right so far as the policy involved is concerned. All that judicial review has to do with it is a question of abstract power.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; that is right. Now, if Congress should come to the conclusion on the Senator's argument that it affects the morals of the people, the labor of the people, that there should be an eight-hour labor day, or that all labor should be combined into a labor union, and should therefore prohibit transportation from State to State of any commodity which is not the product of eight-hour labor or of union labor, does the Senator

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Or that we could prohibit it altogether?

Mr. SPOONER. Or prohibit it altogether.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. What is the Senator's question?

Mr. SPOONER. Can the court review the wisdom and discretion of Congress?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will answer that question upon the very best of authority.

Mr. SPOONER. What is it?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER

Mr. SPOONER. I deny the ex cathedra character of the testimony

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In the oleomargarine case one of those familiar types of questions, "If you can do this, can you not do something else that is extreme?" was asked of the Senator from Wisconsin by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]. The Senator from Texas said:

Mr. Ballex. Mr. President, with the Senator's permission, I am going to take my question away from oleomargarine, because I really desire an expression of the Senator's opinion.

The same phrase, always used.

The same phrase, always used.

Let us broaden it until, we will say, Congress should pass a law declaring that every article, when passing from one State into another, should immediately, upon the arrival of that article, or of all articles, into the State, become subject to its laws, does the Senator from Wisconsin believe that such a law would be constitutional?

Mr. Spooner, Subject to the police laws of the State?

Well, it is an impossible question. Congress would never think of passing any such law.

(CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 3500, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, vol. 35.)

So I adopt the Senator's language in answering the Senator's question.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, Mr. President, the Senator from Texas, with his accustomed dialectic skill in debate upon the oleomargarine bill, vainly attempted to force me or beguile me into a defense of it under the commerce clause of the Constitution. I did justify it under the taxing clause of the Constitution.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But will the Senator pardon me right there?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; of course.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That has nothing to do with the answer which the Senator gave, which was absolutely the correct answer and the one that has been given this morning. The same sort of argument which the Senator is making now has been put to the Supreme Court, that it is an "impossible question." For example, the Senator asked me whether if this For example, the Senator asked me whether, if this power was conceded to prohibit it in one, we could not prohibit it in all; could we not go to the extent of providing that everybody in the United States shall join a labor union and not ship their goods otherwise?

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator said "Yes."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I said, in answer to that, "It is an impossible question," to use the exact language of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. No; the Senator said "Yes."
Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I say it is an "impossible question."
Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.
Mr. CARMACK. I think it is the answer which seems impossible, rather than the question. [Laughter.]
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, the Senator is interjecting, on behalf of the Senator from Wisconsin, his ready wit.

Mr. CARMACK. I withdraw it, Mr. President.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from Wisconsin has asked me a question, and I want to answer it.

Mr. SPOONER. This question has troubled me more than any other question which is to-day mooted in the United States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am trying my best, with a great deal of diligence and a great deal of hard labor, to relieve the Senator from his trouble, if he is willing to be relieved. Now, I want to answer the Senator's question. The Senator asked me whether or not I thought we could pass a law directly prohibiting child labor in any State.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

CAN CONGRESS DO INDIRECTLY WHAT IT CAN NOT DO DIRECTLY?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And he then answered it himself by saying we could not; but that was not the subject to decide. have the Senator's words entirely in mind, and I am now going to ask the Senator a question. Then the Senator asked, with some vigor, if we could not do this directly, how, by using the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, can we accomplish the same object indirectly?

Now I ask the Senator, does the Senator say that we could pass a law directly prohibiting lotteries in any State?

Mr. SPOONER. We could not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. We could not. Then, according to the Senator's reasoning, I ask how can we, by invoking the inter-state-commerce clause of the Constitution, do that very thing For we have.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, Congress passed two acts in

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President-

Mr. SPOONER. Pardon me a moment. In the exercise of its undoubted constitutional power, Congress passed an act excluding lottery tickets and lottery literature from the mails.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I went over the history of that.
Mr. SPOONER. It will take but a moment. Congress had direct authority to do that. Congress supplemented, I think unwisely and unconstitutionally, although the Supreme Court held it to be constitutional-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Although the Supreme Court held to the contrary

Mr. SPOONER. I was about to say that although the Supreme Court, having the case under consideration three times, by a majority of one sustained the act which was passed to exclude lottery tickets, literature, etc., from the mails.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Do I understand the Senator to criticise the Supreme Court because it decided by a majority of one?

Mr. SPOONER. Well, it was a case that I do not regard as being an authority to build a fabric upon which would entirely

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact, since he has mentioned that it was decided by a divided court, that the minority of four placed their dissent almost exclusively upon the ground, not that Congress did not have the power to exclude lottery tickets from interstate commerce if they were articles of commerce, but upon the point that lottery tickets were no more the subject of commerce than policies of insurance were the subject of commerce.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator will not permit me to finish the sentence.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not at that point; but now I will.

Mr. SPOONER I only want to say this, and then I will not interrupt any further-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. All right; if you can satisfy the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter], who is to take the floor as soon as

Mr. SPOONER. This is a more important question than the question which the Senator from Montana wants to discuss.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think the Senator from Wisconsin will find it as hard to convince the Senator from Montana upon that point as I find it to convince the Senator from Wisconsin on this. Mr. SPOONER. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the court say, in the majority opinion:

The whole subject is too important, and the questions suggested by its consideration are too difficult of solution, to justify any attempt to lay down a rule for determining in advance the validity of every statute that may be enacted under the commerce clause.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. You are reading from the end of the lottery case decision now. Mr. SPOONER. I am reading the end of the opinion of the court.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; I know that. I was going to read it myself.

Mr. SPOONER. The court continue:

We decide nothing more in the present case than that lottery tickets are subjects of traffic among those who choose to sell or buy them; that the carriage of such tickets by independent carriers from one State to another is therefore interstate commerce—

Not the persons who had engaged in the manufacture of that product in the States before it was put into interstate commerce at all, but to the product transported-that under its power to regulate commerce among the several States, Congress, subject to the limitations imposed by the Constitution upon the exercise of the powers granted, has plenary authority over such commerce and may prohibit the carriage of such tickets from State to

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; I am very much obliged to the Senator for reading what I was going to read myself.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator is entirely welcome.

But there is a broad distinction between a case where the question, only substituting for the labor union the product of matter involved is held by the court to be the subject of transportation itself, and therefore subject to the regulative power of Congress and

Mr. BEVERIDGE. You put a proposition and then go on and do not let me answer it.

Mr. SPOONER. With this sentence I will relieve the Senator: And the prohibition of the transportation from State to State of an entirely innocuous article of commerce from the standpoint of morals and everything else, so far as the article is concerned, simply with reference to the character of those who manufacture it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, Mr. President, I hope the Senator will give me his attention upon that last proposition.

Mr. SPOONER. I will.

NATURE OF ARTICLE SOURCE OF POLICY, BUT NOT OF POWER.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will answer the Senator's question. The Senator has told this Senate, who are more or less familiar with this Lottery Case, that lottery tickets were excluded be-cause they were per sc a bad thing. That is what the Senator cause they were per sc a bad thing. That is what the Senator said. He further said that the distinction between excluding the article—a lottery ticket—from commerce and excluding a child-made piece of goods from commerce was that the childmade piece of goods had in itself no evil, whereas the lottery ticket did have evil.

The Senator does not mean to let the Senate understand him as saying that. The lottery ticket was as innocuous as this desk; as innocuous, so far as the ticket itself is concerned, just as the product of child labor is, as innocuous as this desk. it became tainted at the source of its issue, just as child-made goods become tainted with the crime of their manufacture.

There is where the original taint came that excluded the lottery ticket; not in the ticket itself, which was as harmless as any other substance, but in the fact that it issued from a gambling establishment and was a species and a product of crime.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I must get on with this Lottery Case, because I promised the Senator from Montana that I would get through. If the Senator has something else than witty remarks to make, I shall be glad to hear him.

Mr. CARMACK. I was going to suggest that there was an evil resulting directly from the commerce involved in the carrying of lottery tickets.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, Mr. President-

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me just to ask him one question there?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. BACON. The Senator says the lottery ticket is in itself as innocuous as the desk which the Senator uses for the purpose of illustration.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is what I said. The Senator is right about that.

Mr. BACON. The question I want to ask the Senator is this: Does he recognize or claim that obscene literature is innocuous because there is nothing offensive in the paper upon which it is written or printed?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; certainly not. It is innocuous so far as the paper itself is concerned on which it is written or printed. But I am going to read to the Senate the obscene literature statute and several other statutes we have passed, some concerning articles and excluding them from commerce, that are not innocuous either in their origin or in their consequences.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President-

VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I yield.

Mr. PERKINS. As the Senator is answering a question which has been asked by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner], I wish on that line to ask if I understand him correctly that, if Congress in its wisdom should see proper, and it could be shown to be as deleterious and as debasing to the moral, spiritual, and physical welfare of mankind as child labor that men and women who are over 50 years of age perform labor in the manufacture of goods, whether Congress has the power to pass a law prohibiting the transportation of goods made by them?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will say that I have been unfortunate in not having had the Senator's presence when I argued that question in varying forms. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] asked, if we had the power to do this, had we not the power to make everybody join a labor union and exclude from transportation articles which were not made by such labor. The Senator from California [Mr. Perkins] now puts the same people who are over 50 years of age. The answer is the same. I carefully answered the question the Senator from Wisconsin put to me from two points of view, one the broad point of view, which is not at all called for by this bill; and the other the narrower point of view, which is called for by this bill.

I would be glad to go over that again if it were not that the Senator from Montana is waiting to take the floor at the conclusion of my remarks. I will, however, with the permission of the Senator from Montana, merely take the time to answer the

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I think it can be shown that as pitiable a sight as can be called to mind is that of aged persons who are compelled to labor physically or mentally for the support of those who are dependent upon them. I think there can be as forcible an appeal made in their behalf as has been made for children under 14 years of age. The child is looking with hope and buoyancy to the future

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator must not take my time to deliver an oration, because I know what the effect of that would be. It would get the Senate off from the subject I am trying to discuss.

Mr. PERKINS. I will say that I have yielded my desk to the Senator from Indiana from which to deliver his speech and that it has had more brains back of it during the few hours my friend has been there than it has had for the last fourteen years since I have been there. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will ask the Senator this question:

Does he propose to vote against the exclusion from interstate commerce of goods made by the blood of children because he fears some person might introduce a bill excluding from interstate commerce goods made by men and women over 50 years of age?

Mr. PERKINS. I am waiting for the completion of the argument of the Senator before I decide.

THIS ILLUSTRATED BY EXCLUSION OF LOTTERY TICKETS.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Indiana yield to me for a question?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator says, referring to the lottery ticket, that the vice of it is in the issuing of it; the taint which characterizes it is its origin.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I know just what the Senator is going to say, that the termination of the ticket is also.

Mr. SPOONER. I knew the Senator would know that; but the Senator knowing that, did not say that. He traces the whole trouble to the source. Now, is it not a fact that the whole trouble with the lottery ticket lay in its transportation?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The trouble is at both ends of the line.

Mr. SPOONER. No; it lay in the transportation.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. The trouble is at both ends of the line.

Mr. SPOONER. The trouble in the beginning is nothing without the end.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And the trouble at the end is nothing without the beginning.

Mr. SPOONER. Between the beginning and the end. The trouble is in the transportation. The lottery ticket is signed. That entitles no one to draw from the lottery; but when it is transported and when it is delivered after having been transported, that is the consummation of a gambling contract.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But I ask the Senator this: As a question of power and not as a question of policy—excluding that does the Senator say that the evil, either at the beginning or at the end, is what gives us the power?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not say that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then the power exists—the policy being put aside-regardless of the evil either at the beginning or at the end of the lottery ticket's journey.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is right. The Senator takes a position as broad as I do.

Mr. SPOONER. No; I do not take the Senator's position at all. I am trying to understand it.

Mr. President, an article manufactured in whole or in part by child labor-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I want to keep the Senator on the lottery-ticket proposition, because I want to make a point on that, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. SPOONER. I will get to that, if the Senator will allow me inst a moment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not want you to get by it. I want you to stick to it.

Mr. SPOONER. A lottery ticket is nothing without de-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly not.

Mr. SPOONER. And having been excluded from the mails it can only be delivered by express companies.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will allow the Senator from Indiana to proceed, as he practically agreed that he would close his remarks near 2 o'clock.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am trying to do so just as fast as I can.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask permission of the Senator from

Maine

Mr. HALE. To prolong the discussion?

Mr. SPOONER. No, sir; not at all. But only to take one moment.

Mr. HALE. I want the Senator to bear in mind what was practically the obligation of the Senator from Indiana that he would close his remarks about 2 o'clock.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I will say to the Senator-

Mr. SPOONER. I was not contract; but I will observe it. I was not a party to the making of that

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will try to conclude as soon as I can. I will say to the Senator from Maine that I have occupied the last hour in answering questions, or, rather, having Sena-tors make speeches in my speech. I do not object to that at all, only I am not to blame for that.

Mr. SPOONER. I am to blame for putting some questions to the Senator from Indiana, which are pertinent, I think, and which are involved in the pending legislation. With one more suggestion, I will not interrupt him further.

The lottery ticket is of no avail whatever; it does no harm until it is delivered.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. It has been excluded from the mails, and therefore it can only be delivered by express, and the delivery consummates the contract.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But I have covered that—
Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, the delivery consummated the contract, and the harm was really in the delivery. Now, in the case of an article entirely innocuous, which might be transported from one State to another and delivered in a State other than the State of production, there is no harm in the delivery. It is just as good an article and it is just as necessary to the people to have it delivered as if child labor had not entered into its production. So that in that case the whole trouble, the whole evil is in the State of production, and delivery and transportation have nothing to do with it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, I ask the Senator the question I asked him a moment ago, because I want to get from him the answer that he made a moment ago. Excluding the question of policy and considering the question of power-which is what we are now dealing with—does the Senator say that either the shipment or the delivery of a lottery ticket confers the power upon us?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not; but I say this-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly; that is as broad a position as take.

Mr. SPOONER. I say that the court held it was an article of commerce; that it involved transportation and delivery, and therefore it might be regulated, and I say this is an entirely different case.

CORRECTNESS OF SUPREME COURT IN LOTTERY CASE.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, the Senator has admitted, as I knew he must admit when the question was put, that, as a question of power, neither the shipment nor the delivery of the lottery ticket confers the power upon us.

Mr. SPOONER. I said the principle in the case of child labor is different from the one involved in the lottery decision.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator has overruled the Supreme Court of the United States in the Lottery Case, and has said so frankly.

Mr. SPOONER.

Mr. SPOONER. I am stating my opinion about it. Mr. BEVERIDGE. When I asked him if that was true, he said it was a divided court; and I pointed out that the division did not occur upon this question at all, but it did occur upon the question whether a lottery ticket was an article of com-merce. That is true, is it not?

Of course the Senator would not say that to-day either the shipment or the delivery was what created the power, because, if he had, he would have been confronted by the historic fact that up to about fifty years ago lottery tickets and lotteries were a favorite method of raising money for various enterprises in this country, and no law could have been passed up to that time.

Now, I want to go on with this Lottery case. The Senator from Wisconsin says we have no power-and I concede itto pass a law directly stopping child labor. Therefore, said he, under the interstate commerce clause can we do indirectly what we admit we can not do directly?

But that is answered by substituting the words "lottery ticket" for "child labor" and by asking the Senator, "Can we pass a law directly prohibiting lotteries in any State?" and the Senator says, "No; certainly not."

Then, using his own language and substituting only the word "lottery," I ask him whether we can invoke the interstate-commerce clause to do that indirectly which he admits we can not do directly; and the Senator is impaled upon the horn of that dilemma because of this decision of the Supreme Court with which the Senator disagrees.

Of course, all I can do to convince the Senator is to cite decisions of the Supreme Court; and if the Senator does not believe it is constitutional under that authority, of course that is the end of my labor. Now, I will read further, and I want the attention of both Senators to this. I am trying to get through as fast as I can, and I should like the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] to this. I continue the reading of this decision.

I am still reading from the decision of the Supreme Court in the Lottery case:

In this connection it must not be forgotten that the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States is plenary, is complete in itself, and is subject to no limitations except such as may be found in the Constitution.

Now, proceeds the court:

What provision in that instrument can be regarded as limiting the exercise of the power granted? What clause can be cited which in any degree countenances the suggestion that one may, of right, carry or cause to be carried from one State to another that which will harm the public morals? We can not think of any clause of that instrument that could possibly be invoked by those who assert their right to send lottery tickets from State to State except the one—

That is where the Lottery case is a good deal weaker than the child-labor case-providing that no person shall be deprived of his liberty without due process of law.

I think that answers the question that was suggested early in the day by the Senator from Rhode Island. I have a lot of this Lottery case that I must read, and the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Montana are both very justly impatient.

Mr. SPOONER rose. Mr. BEVERIDGE. Suppose you allow me to read this, also from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Lottery case:

If it be said that the act of 1895 is inconsistent with the tenth mendment, reserving to the States, respectively, or to the people the powers not delegated to the United States, the answer is that the power to regulate commerce among the States has been expressly delegated to

And this:

POLICE POWER OF STATE v. "ONLY POWER COMPETENT TO END" EVIL.

As a State may, for the purpose of guarding the morals of its own people, forbid all sales of lottery tickets within its limits, so Congress, for the purpose of guarding the people of the United States against the "widespread pestilence of lotteries" and to protect the commerce which concerns all the States, may prohibit the carrying of lottery tickets from one State to another.

And this:

It said, in effect, that it would not permit the declared policy of the States, which sought to protect their people against the mischiefs of the lottery business, to be overthrown or disregarded by the agency of interstate commerce. We should hesitate long before adjudging that an evil of such appalling character—

And where is the Senator from Wisconsin? Mr. SPOONER. He is here.

carried on through interstate commerce, can not be met and crushed by the only power competent to that end.

And so, as in the case of the lottery tickets, each State had a perfect right to pass lottery laws that would end the evil within its borders; but that would not prevent a lottery in another State sending the evil into the first State. There was only one power competent to that end, and although nobody questioned the police power of the States acting upon this subject within their limits, still it could only be ended, says the Supreme Court, by invoking the power of the General Government.

But the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] says that this decision of the Supreme Court is itself unconstitutional.

But never mind. The Supreme Court goes on:

We say competent to that end, because Congress alone has the power to occupy by legislation the whole field of interstate commerce. What was said by this court upon a former occasion may well be here repeated: "The framers of the Constitution never intended that the legislative power of the Nation should find itself incapable of disposing of a subject-matter specifically committed to its charge." (In re Rahrer, 140 U. S., 545, 562.)

And the Supreme Court concludes this particular syllogism as follows:

as follows:

If the carrying of lottery tickets from one State to another be interstate commerce, and if Congress is of opinion that an effective regulation for the suppression of lotteries, carried on through such commerce, is to make it a criminal offense to cause lottery tickets to be carried from one State to another, we know of no authority in the courts to hold that the means thus devised are not appropriate and necessary to protect the country at large against a species of interstate commerce which, although in general use and somewhat favored in both national and State legislation in the early history of the country, has grown into disrepute and has become offensive to the entire people of the Nation. It is a kind of traffic which no one can be entitled to pursue as of right.

So that the naturer was not limited if it was merely an article

So that the power was not limited if it was merely an article of interstate commerce. The Supreme Court excludes, as the Senator did in answering my question, the suggestion that power arises by reason of the evil of the traffic. There is where the policy comes in, not the power.

Now, I call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to this, because this is his point:

That regulation may sometimes appropriately assume the form of prohibition is also illustrated by the case of diseased cattle transported from one State to another. Such cattle may have, notwithstanding their condition, a value in money for some purposes, and yet it can not be doubted that Congress, under its power to regulate commerce, may either provide for their being inspected before transportation begins, or, in its discretion, may prohibit their being transported from one State to another. another

Still the Supreme Court keeps on:

The act of July 2, 1890, known as the Sherman antitrust act, and which is based upon the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States, is an illustration of the proposition that regulation may take the form of prohibition. The object of that act was to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies. To accomplish that object Congress declared certain contracts to be illegal. That act, in effect, prohibited the doing of certain things, and its prohibitory clauses have been sustained in several cases as valid under the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce.

And again, for it appears that the Supreme Court was quite determined and persistent on this question:

That regulation may sometimes take the form or have the effect of prohibition is also illustrated in the case of in re Rahrer, 140 U. S., 545. In Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S., 623, it was adjudged that State legislation prohibiting the manufacture of spirituous, malt, vinous, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors within the limits of the State, to be there sold or bartered for general use as a beverage, does not necessarily infringe any right, privilege, or immunity secured by the Constitution of the United States or by the amendments thereto.

Thus under its power to regulate interstate commerce, as involved in the transportation, in original packages, of ardent spirits from one State to another.

And then, of course, it goes into the Rahrer case more completely; but I will leave that for a moment, because I come to the other questions which the Senator from California [Mr. Perkins] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] raised as to the possible abuse of this power. I will read that portion of the decision which the Senator from Wisconsin read. On this point the Supreme Court says:

We decide nothing more in the present case than that lottery tickets are subjects of traffic among those who choose to sell or buy them; that the carriage of such tickets by independent carriers from one State to another is therefore interstate commerce; that under its power to regulate commerce among the several States Congress, subject to the limitations imposed by the Constitution upon the exercise of the powers granted—

And the court says that there was no clause that it could find that limited them-has plenary authority over such commerce and may prohibit the carriage of such tickets from State to State.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] has admitted, and the court has held, that so far as the power is concerned, excluding the question of policy, the power does not spring from the evil at the beginning or the end of transportation or from the middle of it either.

Mr. President, there are some other cases upon this point, but I do not intend, in view of the lateness of the hour, to give any more time to this particular point. Perhaps as the debate proceeds I shall. But I think I shall be able to convince—I wish the Senator from Rhode Island were here, because it is a point to which I wish to call his particular attention most of all—Senators that Congress has already exercised this power many times.

POWER OVER FOREIGN AND INTERSTATE COMMERCE IDENTICAL.

The reason I ask it is because the Senator from Rhode Island raised this question with me himself, both personally and in debate. Does any Senator, any lawyer—and if he does, I will be glad to hear from him now—contend that the power of Congress over interstate commerce and over foreign commerce is not precisely the same?

If any Senator does so contend, I am compelled to quote other decisions of the Supreme Court, and I will quote them briefly, to the effect that they are the same; and I call the attention of Senators to this. It is conclusive of this case, more conclusive than the Lottery case, though that alone is decisive.

I say that the following cases decide that the power of Congress over interstate commerce is the same as the power of Congress over foreign commerce, and I quote the following authorities:

Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat.), which, of course, is the foundation decision of all interstate-commerce decisions.

The Supreme Court says, through Mr. Justice Marshall, after he had given the definition of the word "regulate" and the word "commerce"

Mr. ALDRICH entered the Chamber.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will say to the Senator from Rhode Island that I promised him that I would cite decisions upon this proposition—because if I am right upon this proposition, this case is settled, even more so than the Lottery case, which settles it entirely aside from the point I am now making-that the power of Congress over interstate commerce is the same as it is over foreign commerce. The first case is that of Gibbons v.

Says the court, and it is Marshall who is speaking-

If this be the admitted meaning of the word-

That is, the word "commerce"- in its application-

I want the Senator from Rhode Island to hear these cases, because the Senator was rather worried about this proposition. He said so yesterday and again to-day-in its application to foreign nations-

Mr. ALDRICH. My doubt upon this subject is shared by the Supreme Court, as I have shown by the extract from the decision which I read, which was delivered recently.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I want to say to the Senator that that does not conflict, and that the Supreme Court had directly held this thing. The Senator certainly is not unwilling to listen to the decisions of the Supreme Court.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. Justice White, who delivered the opinion in the case from which I read, evidently was not aware of the fact the Senator has stated.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That was the case of Butterfield v. Stranahan. It does not hold any such thing, as I shall show. But listen to the Supreme Court, speaking by its greatest Chief Justice:

If this be the admitted meaning of the word, in its application to foreign nations, it must carry the same meaning throughout the sentence, and remain a unit, unless there be some plain intelligible cause which alters it.

Story-and Story is its greatest commentator-in his work on the Constitution, goes on to tell exactly what the clause does apply to.

Says Story:

It [the interstate-commerce power] extends as well to the naviga-tion of vessels engaged in carrying passengers, and whether steam vessels or of any other description, as to the navigation of vessels en-gaged in traffic and general coasting business.

Now I come to the point about which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] wanted me to answer him. He is not here. Story says:

It [the interstate-commerce power] extends to the laying of embargoes, as well on domestic as on foreign voyages.

Now, then, I read from a Supreme Court opinion, United States 141, page 57. It is proper to call it the great case of Crutcher v. Kentucky. Up to that time it was undoubtedly one of the most important deliverances, outside of those made by Story and Marshall. It was made by Mr. Justice Bradley, whose masterful ability and attainments are familiar to every lawyer and every schoolboy in the law.

CASE OF CRUTCHER V. KENTUCKY.

That case was where the State of Kentucky required a license from the agent of express companies before permitting them to do any business in that State. Part of the business of the companies in that State was State business and part come in from other States. Of course that was resisted, and the Supreme Court held that such a law was void because it interfered with the power of Congress over interstate commerce, which was exclusively in Congress. In discussing this power and the meaning of the words-

Congress shall have power * * * to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes-

The Supreme Court used the following language:

It has been frequently laid down by this court that the power of Congress over interstate commerce is as absolute as it is over foreign

Is that clear language?

And the court goes on-this is the Supreme Court of the United States speaking, mind you:

United States speaking, mind you:

Would anyone pretend that a State legislature could prohibit a foreign corporation—an English or a French transportation company, for example—from coming into its borders and landing goods and passengers at its wharves, and soliciting goods and passengers for a return voyage, without first obtaining a license from some State officer, and filing a sworn statement as to the amount of its capital stock paid in?

And why not? Evidently because the matter is not within the province of State legislation, but within that of National legislation, (Inman Steamship Company v. Tinker, 94 U. S., 238.) The prerogative, the responsibility, and the duty of providing for the security of the citizens and the people of the United States in relation to foreign corporate bodies, or foreign individuals with whom they may have relations of foreign commerce, belong to the Government of the United States, and not to the governments of the secural States; and confidence in that regard may be reposed in the National Legislature without any anxiety or apprehension arising from the fact that the subject-matter is not within the province or jurisdiction of the State legislatures. And the same thing is exactly true with regard to interstate commerce as it is with regard to foreign commerce. No difference is perfectly state of the service of the service is perfectly state.

It is not necessary to comment upon that. Language can not be clearer and more explicit.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the Senator is aware that the power of Congress over foreign commerce does not depend entirely upon the one clause, the commerce clause of the Constitution.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly I am aware of it. It depends upon two things

Mr. ALDRICH. And therefore that Congress has a different power and an undisputed power over foreign commerce.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The power of taxation, undoubtedly. But let me call the Senator's attention to this. The Senator is a great tariff expert, but, constitutionally, you have the right to lay taxes, to put on tariffs, under the taxing power, only for the purpose of revenue.

When you lay a tariff for protection it comes within the commerce clause of the Constitution; and if the Senator doubts that perhaps he and the Senator from Massachusetts have some respect for Mr. Justice Story, who was the greatest commentator upon our Constitution.

That question came up early in our constitutional history. They said a protective tariff was unconstitutional, and the Supreme Court admitted, and Story admits, that it is unconstitutional under the taxing power alone. Under that Congress has power to lay taxes, impose imposts, etc., and nothing else.

But when it comes to protection, your power is derived from the interstate and foreign commerce clause of the Constitution, and from that alone. The Senator will find one entire chapter of very interesting reading, demonstrating that fact, in Story on the Constitution. Perhaps the ablest piece of work Mr. Justice Story ever did was to demonstrate that that power existed under the interstate and foreign commerce clause.

Mr. ALDRICH. Has the Supreme Court ever questioned that power of Congress?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; and nobody is questioning it now. Mr. ALDRICH. It is purely within the discretion of Congress; and under the taxing power a duty levied for protection or for whatever purpose may be in the minds of Congress can not be questioned by the court.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is what the Senator says; but I am holding up here a book which is the greatest commentary upon the Constitution ever written, wherein a whole chapter is given to an exposition of the reasons why your protective tariff rests not upon the taxing power, but upon the commerce clause.

Mr. ALDRICH rose.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But pardon me a moment. I do not intend that the Senator shall get away from the decision I just read to him, where the Supreme Court justifies the decision in Crutcher v. Kentucky by saying Congress has such and such a power over foreign commerce. If over foreign commerce, then over interstate commerce, because they are one and the same, says the Supreme Court of the United States. Does the Senator admit that that language is clear?

Mr. ALDRICH. The language is clear, but it is not pertinent to the question I am discussing.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Ah, well; we will see. I will come to the pertinence of it in a minute. The proposition I submit is whether anyone questions that the power of Congress over foreign and interstate commerce is the same? Mr. President-

Mr. KNOX. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. KNOX. I am very much interested in the very powerful presentation of the proposition the Senator from Indiana is now discussing, and it is one which has given a great many jurists and lawyers a very great deal of thought in the past, and that is the question whether the power over commerce between the States is the same as the power over foreign commerce; or, in other words, whether the power of Congress is as great over commerce between the States as it is over foreign commerce. I want to ask the Senator from Indiana if this thought has occurred to him: That the Congress of the United States would have absolute and exclusive power over foreign commerce if the words "foreign commerce" were not included in the commerce clause of the Constitution at all? Do we not have that power—power over our foreign relations—by virtue of our existence as a Nation; and is not the whole purpose of the commerce clause of the Constitution to give us the power as between the States and with the Indian tribes?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will answer that. The Senator knows much better than I do, because he is much more learned, that this very question has been answered time and time and time again. But I do not think he will find many Senators here this afternoon, in the present temper of the Senate, agreeing with the Senator from Pennsylvania, that we have any "inherent" power at all. I agree with the Senator. I agree that we do have inherent power over foreign commerce, and we do not have to repose it upon the foreign-commerce clause of the Con-

But I can not agree with the Senator that the framers of the Constitution meant nothing at all when they inserted the words "with foreign nations." I can not agree that those words are surplusage, and I have no right to do so in view of the fact that every assertion of our power over foreign commerce, whenever it has been questioned, has been justified under the interstate and foreign commerce clause of the Constitution, without one exception.

Mr. Knox. My suggestion was only meant for the purpose of indicating that there might be a difference between the two powers.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then, as to whether there is a difference between the two powers-of course we have had a decision of the Supreme Court questioned here this afternoon-but let me read it again, because it is worth while to read it, for this point, if it is conceded, settles the question.

I read again from the Supreme Court in Crutcher v. Ken-

It has frequently been laid down by this court that the power of Congress over interstate commerce is as absolute as it is over foreign

That is clear, is it not?

Mr. KNOX. That suggestion was not necessary to the decision of that case. I know at least a dozen cases where that language has been quoted, but I do not know of a single case

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I

Mr. KNOX. I am searching for the truth, exactly as the Senator from Indiana is, and I should like to finish my sentence. I do not know a single case—and I will be under very great personal obligations to the Senator from Indiana if he can indicate a case—where that has been decided, really decided, not merely suggested as a part of the argument upon some other proposition.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I myself first thought this was obiter, but upon examining it, you will find that it is not; and the reason why Mr. Justice Bradley uses this language is to justify the decision which he makes. It is a part of his method of reason-How did he propose to hold unconstitutional the Kentucky law, which was then before the court, which required an agent of an express company to secure a license? He did it by the following reasoning; and even the Senator will admit that if this were obiter, still, in the absence of any definite decision to the contrary on the subject, it would be law, would it not?

Mr. KNOX. I think not. I think obiter is never law. Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will read it.

Would anyone pretend that a State legislature-

I see that amuses the Senator from New Jersey. I call the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania to a case where not only obiter, but a dissenting opinion, in the case of Justice Story, holding as against all the rest of his colleagues that the power over interstate commerce was exclusive in Congress, afterwards in the course of fifteen years became the law. But to quote the Supreme Court:

Would anyone pretend-

I am going to try to show the Senator that Mr. Justice Bradley rests his whole opinion upon that reason.

Says Mr. Justice Bradley, delivering the unanimous opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States:

of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Would anyone pretend that a State legislature could prohibit a foreign corporation—an English or a French transportation company, for example—from coming into its borders and landing goods and passengers at its wharves and soliciting goods and passengers for a return voyage without first obtaining a license from some State officer and filing a sworn statement as to the amount of its capital stock paid in? And why not? Evidentity because the matter is not within the province of State legislation, but within that of national legislation. (Inman Steamship Co. v. Tinker, 94 U. S., 238.)

The prerogative, the responsibility, and the duty of providing for the security of the citizens and the people of the United States in relation to foreign corporate bodies or foreign individuals with whom they may have relations of foreign commerce, belong to the Government of the United States and not to the government of the several States; and confidence in that regard may be reposed in the National Legislature without any anxiety or apprehension arising from the fact that the subject-matter is not within the province or jurisdiction of the State legislatures.

And the same thing is exactly true with regard to interstate commerce as it is with regard to foreign commerce. No difference is perceivable between the two.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Kean in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. I only want to state this for the purpose of keeping myself right and to give the Senator some information.

I had something to do with the Lottery case. The final argument was made when I was Attorney-General, and I had something to do with the preparation of the case; and the reason why I say I would be under personal obligations for a direct decision upon the proposition that the control over interstate commerce is just the same as it is over foreign commerce, is because we used every one of those cases which the Senator has cited and we worked every one of those statements for all they were worth in order to get the court to base the decision in the Lottery case upon that ground, which would have been conclusive ground, and would not have necessitated the court going elsewhere. But if the Senator will examine that decision, he will see they put it on other grounds.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In the lottery decision, the court did expressly state that the power to regulate involved the power to prohibit, and that the power of prohibition was not only necessarily involved, but also had been exercised.

Mr. KNOX. To prohibit in that case under its peculiar facts.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; they cited several other instances—the transportation of alcoholic liquors, for example, or of infected cattle, although there might be property rights in the infected cattle.

CASE OF BROWN v. HUSTON ON IDENTITY OF POWER OVER FOREIGN AND INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

In Brown v. Houston the Supreme Court of the United States uses this language:

The power to regulate commerce among the several States is granted to Congress in terms as absolute as is the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations.

I think the Senator from Rhode Island will not be able to find, with a good deal of research, any language more clear and emphatic than that.

In the case of Stockton v. Baltimore, etc., Railway Company (32 Fed. Rep.), while the language is not so clear and emphatic, there are some things which ought to be quoted:

Says the court-and this judge was later one of the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, and one of its greatest justices; I was taught, as a law student, to admire and revere him-says this great lawyer:

We think that the power of Congress is supreme over the whole

Over interstate commerceunimpeded and unembarrassed by State lines or State laws; that, in this matter the country is one, and the work to be accomplished is National, and that State interests, State jealousies, and State prejudices do not require to be consulted. In MATTERS OF FOREIGN AND INTERSTATE COMMERCE THERE ARE NO STATES.

Can human tongue frame language more emphatic than these words of the Supreme Court of the United States? Now, I have cited from Chief Justice Marshall, in Gibbons v. Ogden, clear down to 141 United States, the definite, clear, direct, unconfused statement of the Supreme Court that the power over foreign and interstate commerce is the same.

Senators may explain one quotation upon the ground that it is obiter dictum.

Senators may say, in another place, the court has no business to put it in.

Senators may say that the reasoning of Chief Justice Marshall was entirely wrong. But I have nothing to do with that; that is the quarrel of the Senators with the Supreme Court. If in the efforts of Senators to resist the power of Congress to prohibit this great National evil they want to resort to those things, they can. All that it is necessary for me to do is to cite the direct decisions of the Supreme Court upon this matter.

Without a dissenting word, in language as clear as any court ever used, they have held the power over interstate and foreign commerce to be the same. It was not necessary for me to make this point at all, after the decision in the Lottery case and the Forty-three Gallons of Whisky case.

But if—aside from the Lottery case—if the language of the Supreme Court in Cruthers v. Kentucky and the other cases I have cited is correct, we have already done all that I ask the Senate to do. Because in the Dingley law there is a provision which I will read. It is the same thing in the McKinley law.

I have here in my hand a list of the members of the Finance Committee of the Senate and of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, who inserted this provision, and it was inserted without any party division.

No lawyer found anything unconstitutional in this, although this clause of the tariff law does not fall at all within the taxing power; it is exclusively under the power over foreign and interstate commerce. The paragraph is as follows:

GOODS MADE BY CONVICTS EXCLUDED; WHY NOT GOODS MADE BY CHILDREN?

SEC. 31. That all goods, wares, articles, and merchandise manufactured wholly or in part in any foreign country by convict labor shall not be entitled to entry at any of the ports of the United States, and the importation thereof is hereby prohibited, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary for the enforcement of this provision.

So that in our laws to-day, without a dissenting vote in either House of Congress, coming absolutely and exclusively under our power over foreign commerce and not under the taxing power at all, we have prohibited the importation of convict-made goods. Now, if all these decisions of the Supreme Court are not wrong and foolish, if what they say is true, that our power over interstate commerce is the same as over foreign commerce, then we have the power over interstate commerce over interstate commerce over foreign commerce. terstate commerce to do what we have done over foreign Commerce.

Very well. Then we have the power to exclude from interstate commerce convict-made goods, as we have already excluded from foreign commerce convict-made goods. And if we have a right to exclude from interstate commerce goods made by convicts, we have a right to exclude goods made by children and the murder of children.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Georgia? Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. BACON. Before the gentleman concludes I desire-Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am not through yet. I would have been through long ago-Mr. BACON. I-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Go ahead.

Mr. BACON. I desired to interrupt the Senator before he concluded. I wish to correct a statement of fact made by the Senator in the course of his remarks, with his permission.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Yesterday, Mr. President—and I am now about to read from the stenographer's report of what he said and what I said—the Senator from Indiana was speaking of conditions in the State of Georgia and the number of children who were engaged in the mills in that State, and the question of the efficiency of the Georgia law regulating child labor came under discussion. I asked the Senator this question:

cussion. I asked the Senator this question:

I should like to ask the Senator, as he seems to have exhaustively studied the question, if he is prepared to state how many children in Georgia under 12 years of age or under 14 years of age are to-day employed in the mills?

Mr. Beverioge. I will answer the Senator even more directly than that. I will state that under the new law, which went into effect this very year, there had been applications for the employment of children up to last week in the county clerk's office—I believe it is in Atlanta, or whichever is the greatest city in your State—for 3,000 children, just as there were in Maryland applications since the new law went into effect there for 11,000 children, 1,200 of which were affected, although the census shows there were only 5,000 children of that age at work after the law went into effect on the first of the year, and I shall present it. There have been applications for more than 3,000.

Mr. Bacon. How many of the applications have been granted?
Mr. Beverioge. All were granted.
Mr. Beverioge. Xes, sir.

Mr. President the Senator then—

Mr. President, the Senator then—— Mr. BEVERIDGE. I was mistaken about that. I presented the facts later in my speech.

Mr. BACON. Very well; I now have the facts definitely in my possession. The Senator then went on to read an extract from an article which had appeared in the Atlanta Journal.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I prefer that the Senator would make his statement after I get through.

Mr. BACON. I will not take much of the time of the Senator.

Art. BACON. The Senator read an article from the Atlanta

Journal to the effect, not in the way of a statement by the ordinary, who I may state is the probate judge—that is the title given to him there—that it was estimated by him that during the current year

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I read that statement.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will let me proceed. I will not take more than two or three minutes. That during the current year it was estimated there would be between two and three thousand applications.

I asked the Senator this morning if he had any further evidence of the correctness of the statement which he had made, to wit, that 3,000 applications had been made and all of them had been granted, than the evidence which he read from the Atlanta Journal, and he said he had no other.

I then telegraphed to Atlanta for the purpose of getting the facts, and it is for the purpose of reading these telegrams that I took the liberty of interrupting the Senator.

I have, first, a telegram from the Hon, Madison Bell, a member of the State legislature of Georgia, and who assisted in the framing of the State law, and here is what he says about it after having made an investigation:

BEVERIDGE entirely ignorant of provisions and effect of the child-labor law

The Senator went on to state that there was no provision for an inspection

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Go on and read your telegram, since you are going to read that kind of a statement. I want to get through with this speech; but go ahead.

Mr. BACON. I am very much obliged to the Senator.

Grand juries in each county have special authority to inspect, and must see that law is enforced.

Here is the particular part:

Ten permits only by Ordinary Wilkinson, of this county. Can prove that thousands of children have been freed from the mills in this State since January 1, 1907.

MADISON BELL

For whose character in every regard I most unqualifiedly vouch.

Now, here is a telegram from the ordinary himself, who, as I stated, is probate judge in charge of this matter.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. He confirms Bell, I suppose.

Mr. BACON. It is addressed to me. It goes on to say in response to my telegram:

Assertion in Senate as to application for exception certificates under child-labor law incorrect, as only ten applications have been granted in Fulton County, and the officers of the mills and factories affected by the law are desirous of having it enforced.

JOHN R. WILKINSON,
Ordinary, Fulton County.

Mr. President, if the Senator is as wide of correctness as to the other facts he stated as he was when he stated that 3,000 applications had been made and 3,000 applications had been granted, I think it is necessary that he should supervise his evidence to some extent.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to say in answer to that that it was unnecessary for the Senator to take my time, when I am trying to get through my speech, to state that, because I myself trying to get through my speech, to state that, because I myself read, as soon as I could find it among the mass of papers that the Senator saw upon my desk, the extract from the Atlanta Journal, from his own city, upon which my statement was made. So the correction of the statement was made almost as soon as the error itself was made.

Now, as to the statement of the gentleman, in the telegram, which is entirely gratuitous, that I am ignorant of the provisions of that law, neither he nor anyone else who reads that absurd statute can be ignorant of it. I state to the Senator now that every statement that I have made concerning this outrage of child labor in Georgia is supported by the affidavits of men and women who have personally investigated it.

Mr. BACON. Now, Mr. President—
Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am not going into any debate right now. Mr. BACON. The Senator will certainly permit me to correct one thing?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I will not now. I will after I get through.

Mr. BACON. When the Senator gets through he can not, because there is another order.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It does not make any differenceMr. BACON. I want to call attention to the fact-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator might have made his statement to-morrow or any other time.

Mr. BACON. The Senator's statement is incorrect to the extent of the difference between three thousand and ten.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is not the difference between three thousand and ten.

Mr. BACON. All right.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will be in order.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The correction was made almost as soon as the error itself was made.

Mr. BACON. The Senator has not corrected the state-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator from Georgia and the people of his State are satisfied with the law, all I have to say is that people from his State who have investigated it are not. Mr. BACON. Mr. President-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I refuse to yield to the Senator any further.

Mr. BACON. Whenever a State is not satisfied with the law. it is capable of amending it, and it will do it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I further state that two or three times-I do not know how many times, but at least once, and I will confine it to that-in the State of Georgia the effort was made to defeat any effective law, and it was successful; and at another time a law which might have been made effective was not properly enforced.

Mr. BACON. I challenged the Senator to embody it in his speech, and he would not permit me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana declines to yield.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, Mr. President, if, then, the power of Congress over foreign commerce and interstate commerce is the same, and by virtue of the former we have prohibited convictmade goods, we may also prohibit the transportation of convictmade goods in interstate commerce. But if convict-made goods may be prohibited in interstate commerce, then why can we not also prohibit child-made goods?

CONGRESS HAS FREQUENTLY EXERCISED POWER OF PROHIBITION UNDER COMMERCE CLAUSE.

Mr. President, I have shown that under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution the Supreme Court has time and again held that it meant the power to prohibit the transportation in interstate commerce of such articles as in the judgment of Congress were inimical to the interests of the Nation. We have done that, and I propose to call the attention of the Senate to some of the statutes by which we have done it, where there was no reference to any committee of the question of its constitutionality, although it was a prohibition direct, plain, and undisguised.

For instance, in foreign commerce we have had our embargo

We have prohibited the importation of slaves.

We have prohibited the importation of counterfeit coins.

And we have prohibited the importation of convict-made goods. I am sorry the Senator from South Carolina and other Senators who have said that they are so greatly interested in amending this evil are not here. We have passed a large number of laws, many of them quite exceptional, prohibiting interstate commerce in certain articles.

For example, the act of August 2, 1882, prohibits the transportation in interstate commerce of nitroglycerin in any vessel. The question of its being an explosive has something to do with the policy of prohibiting it, but not with the power of prohibiting it, for we in the same law permit its transportation within the limits of a State.

The act of March 31, 1900, prohibits the transportation of explosive materials in any vessel or vehicle in interstate commerce.

The act of July 1, 1902, prohibits the introduction or sale by another State of dairy or food products which have been falsely labeled or branded.

Now, there is an article of commerce that had nothing the matter with it, so far as hurting the health of the people was

The only objection to oleomargarine was, if they colored it, although the color was entirely healthful, still it fooled the people into thinking it was butter. So we can not say it was affecting the health or the morals of the people and that therefore the power arose from that fact.

The power was exercised because it was absolute; and in the policy of Congress, in our wisdom, we thought it was a wise measure and beneficial to the "interests of the Nation" to exercise that power, and so we did it.

The act of February 3, 1903, prohibits transportation in interstate commerce of cattle without a certificate from the inspector of the Agricultural Department. And this, although a man has an absolute right to his property, and his property amounts to nothing less he can transport it; yet Congress, acting under the power of prohibition in the interstate commerce clause, has prohibited the transportation of cattle without a certificate whether those cattle are diseased or wholesome. So we see that the power does not spring from that.

Then, again, we have the act of February 21, 1905. amining the debate I find that the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Kean], who now occupies the chair, was the Senator who had charge of passing the bill through the Senate. hibits the transportation in interstate commerce of gold and silver goods with the words "U. S. Assay" or any similar

And this was solely under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution. When the bill came in it was referred to the Interstate Commerce Committee. It was reported back by that committee. We had absolutely no power whatever to pass that law except under the interstate-commerce clause of the Consti-

There was nothing whatever in the gold and silver goods that could hurt the morals of the people, as was the case in regard to lottery tickets. The only point was to protect some manufacturers of New Jersey and New York who did not want the words "United States Assay" put upon anything, and because those words had been put upon some importations that were then sent through interstate commerce.

But if we have the power to prohibit the transportation of gold and silver goods with the words "U. S. assay" upon them, which do not hurt the physical condition or morals of the people any place, and passed a law merely to protect the manufacturers of New York, have we not a right to prohibit the transportation of child-made goods from one State to the other, so far as the power is concerned?

What have Senators who are troubled about the question of power to say about that law? Nobody questions it.

Again, the act of March 3, 1905, prohibits the transportation of loose hay and other highly combustible materials on passenger steamers. That is exclusively under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution and not under any other provision of the Constitution whatever.

If as a matter of power we can prohibit the transportation of loose hay, the only reason for it being a matter of policy-it might get afire-why as a matter of power can we not prohibit the transportation of child-made goods? Does it not subserve the "interests of the Nation," as Chief Justice Marshall says, and is not more involved in the ruin of our citizenship than in the possible burning of a steamer or the possible affecting of the business of some watch factories in New Jersey and New

The act of February 21, 1905, prohibits the transportation by carriers of interstate commerce of obscene books, and this although the Constitution expressly guarantees "freedom of speech;" and it has been held that printing is as much speech" as spoken words by the tongue.

Yet, although the Constitution absolutely guarantees "freedom of speech," nevertheless we have prohibited, in spite of that guaranty, the transportation by the channels of interstate commerce of obscene literature, when that is held by the courts to be "speech" as much as anyhing else. We did that under the interstate-commerce clause as a matter of power and because it subserved the "interests of the Nation," as Marshall says, as a matter of policy.

The act of March 3, 1905, prohibits the transportation in interstate commerce of quarantined cattle, this quarantine being established by the Agricultural Department within the United States. And this, mind you, although the cattle might be sound and their transportation and sale "a matter of right," to use the language of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Lottery case.

The act of March 3, 1905-and I call the attention of the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. LATIMER] to this actprohibits the transportation by carriers of interstate commerce of insects of a certain kind.

THESE LAWS PROHIBITING INTERSTATE COMMERCE PASSED WITHOUT QUESTION.

I have the debates on all these laws here. I looked them up very carefully. I wondered why it was that, when we proposed to prohibit the transportation by interstate carriers of the boll weevil, nobody raised a constitutional question. The senior Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] was present, I find. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] was present, I find. The junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Latimer] had the bill in charge. The senior Senator from Texas did not know whether he was going to object or not, but he never stated any constitutional objection to it.

And, ah, yes! the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner], who tells us he is so "troubled" about the "extension of national power;" that he is so concerned about how far we are going to go in including articles in interstate transportationthe senior Senator from Wisconsin-was present. Yet nobody made any objection whatever to the passage of that bill, which is now a law, and the constitutionality of which has never been questioned. It absolutely prohibits the transportation of certain insects by interstate commerce.

What does the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich], who says that the commerce clause of the Constitution means only to "regulate," and not to prohibit; what does the Senator from Wisconsin, who gets so excited and says that it is a serious thing to say that the word prohibit should be read into the word regulate-what do those Senators say about that statute?

Mr. President, if we have not the power, the act which you (Mr. KEAN in the chair) got through the Senate and which you were in charge of and the acts which other Senators presented in the Senate and which were voted upon without objection, are all unconstitutional. Are Senators willing to say that?

If we have the power to prohibit the transportation in interstate commerce of cattle without a certificate, well or ill; if we have the power to prohibit the transportation of certain insects; if we have the power to prohibit the transportation of loose hay in vessels; if we have the power to prohibit the transportation of gold and silver goods merely because they have two words on them, and all under the interstate-commerce clause; if we have the power to prohibit convict-made goods, why have we not the power to prohibit the transportation in interstate commerce of child-labor-made goods?

So far as the question of power is concerned, in none of these cases that I have shown did the power come, in a single instance, from the evil of the article prohibited. As a matter of policy we enacted those laws because they were good for the "interests of the Nation." But if it is good for the "interests of the Naof the Nation." to prohibit the transportation of insects from State to State; if it is good for the "interests of the Nation" to prohibit the importation of convict-made goods; if the power over inter-state commerce equals the power over foreign commerce, as the Supreme Court has said, unless it is overruled by a subcommittee of the Senate; if we have the power to prohibit convict-made goods in interstate commerce, as we have; if we have actually prohibited the transportation of gold and silver merely because they had two words which inconvenienced the business of certain men in New York and New Jersey, all upon the theory that it affected the "interests of the Nation," to again use Chief Justice Marshall's famous phrase, how much more have we got the power to prohibit the transportation in interstate commerce of child-made goods which affect the "interests of the Nation," aye, and the perpetuity of the Nation?

Gentlemen grow excited about refinements. I ask them to explain the laws that are on the statute books. Why did we never hear before of any "danger of the extension of the Federal power" when you were enacting those statutes? Why is it that only when we attempt to stop the murder of children and the debasement of our race and the ruin of our citizens by prohibiting the transportation of child-made goods in interstate commerce that Senators are aroused in defense of an artificial

THE ABUSE OF POWER ARGUMENT.

Now, Mr. President, every question that has been put to me this afternoon has that one argument as its basis, and that one that it so old and familiar that hardly any lawyer needs to look up any authorities upon it. The Senator from Wisconsin says: "Well, if you can do this, can you not also compel all the people of the United States to join the labor union?"

And the Senator from California says

Well, if you can do this, can you not also pass a law prohibiting the transportation in interstate commerce of the labor of men and women over 50?"

Another man says: "If you can do this, can you not also pro-hibit the transportation in interstate commerce of milk from a bay cow milked by a redheaded girl?" and all the rest of these

In short, if you admit the existence of the power at all, where, says the Senator from Wisconsin, will its exercise end? Mr. President, that very question was taken up, and taken up early in our judicial history, and answered. I am not going to take up very much time on it, it is so old and so familiar.

When it was first taken up this whole thing was foreseen.

Undoubtedly the greatest man that we ever had on the Supreme Bench of the United States was Chief Justice Marshall. George Washington thought him so. He anticipated all these questions, because these same arguments were made to him.

The Senator from Wisconsin need not think he is stating any new thing. The questions which the Senator from North Carolina says loom up like some shadows of doom, or something like that, for we are used to such rhetoric-the question which the Senator from California asks-all these methods of reasoning are not new.

You have not discovered any new "specter" in any argument against the existence of power on account of its possible abuse. The resourceful lawyer of long ago anticipated you. All those things were heard from before the foundation of the Government, and answered in the very earliest decisions of the Supreme Court. After holding that the abuse of the power was no argument against its existence, the Supreme Court, through Mr. Justice Marshall, proceeds to tell us where the safety lies; he proceeds to tell us where the restraint is; he proceeds to tell us "where we are going to end," and it is the plain answer that might occur to anyone. But, of course, we could not expect it to occur or even be remembered by lawyers who dispute the correctness of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United

Here is how Chief Justice Marshall, delivering the unanimous opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, disposed of this "grave objection" which so "troubles" some Senators:

The wisdom and the discretion of Congress, their identity with the people, and the influence which their constituents possess at elections, are, in this, as in many other instances, as that, for example, of declaring war, the sole restraints on which they have relied to secure them from its abuse. They are the restraints on which the people must often rely solely in all representative governments. (Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat, p. 197.)

There is the answer to the argument that the abuse of power is an argument against its existence. The remedy for all of our excesses of power is in the hands of our constituents at the ballot box, says the Supreme Court of the United States, through the inspired lips of Chief Justice Marshall.

Nor is that the only case. In Gilman v. Philadelphia it is said by the Supreme Court of the United States:

If it be objected that the conclusion we have reached will arm the States with authority potent for evil, and liable to be abused, there are several answers worthy of consideration. The possible abuse of any power is no proof that it does not exist.

I hope Senators will listen to that.

Many abuses may arise in the legislation of the States which are wholly beyond the reach of the government of the Nation. The safe-guard and remedy are to be found in the virtue and intelligence of the people. They can make and unmake constitutions and laws, and from that tribunal there is no appeal. If a State exercise unwisely the power here in question, the evil consequences will fail chiefly upon her own citizens. They have more at stake than the citizens of any other State. (Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wallace, 731.)

And again:

All power-

Says the Supreme Court in Brown v. The State of Maryland, which is one of the dozen great decisions of the Supreme Court-

All power may be abused, and if the fear of its abuse is to constitute an argument against its existence, it might be urged against the existence of that which is universally acknowledged and which is indispensable to the general safety. (Brown v. State of Md., 12 Wheat,

Now, here is the last utterance of the Supreme Court upon this subject. I do hope I will have the attention of the Senate. because the whole argument against this bill is this:
"If we can do this, what else can we not do?"

I am sorry the Senate does not seem to want to hear the extent of our power, as decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. We passed the bill to prohibit interstate commerce in insects and gold and silver goods, and nobody ever imagined we had not the power. Why are we so impatient, when it comes to ending the murder of children, to hear the extent of our power, as defined by the Nation's supreme tribunal?

Says the Supreme Court in the famous "Lottery case: "

But, as often said, the possible abuse of a power is not an argument against its existence. There is probably no governmental power that may not be exerted to the injury of the public. If what is done by Congress is manifestly in excess of the powers granted to it, then upon the courts will rest the duty of adjudging that its action is neither legal nor binding upon the people. But if what Congress does is within the limits of its power, and is simply unvoice or injurious, the remedy is that suggested by Chief Justice Marshall in Gibbons v. Ogden, when he said—

What I have already read.

So, Mr. President, there is the complete answer, not in one quotation from the Supreme Court, but by many, the argument, and the only argument that we have heard here or will ever hear against the existence of this power, to wit: That "if we admit that we have the power to do this then we have the power to do a great many foolish things;" and the possible abuse of a power is no argument against its existence.

EXAMPLES OF ABUSE OF POWER ARGUMENT REDUCTIO AD ABSURDUM.

Mr. President, if that were the case where would we be? For example, you might say that because we have the power to require interstate carriers to keep books in a certain way which we have done—therefore we have power to require their servants to wear a certain kind of uniform; and, so, that the power to require them to keep books in a certain way does not exist merely because if it does exist the power to do the other foolish thing would exist. But that is absurd. have the power, but it would be an absurd thing to do it, and we would not do it; and if we should do it the remedy is in the hands of the people at the ballot box, and they would put us out of office.

You might as well say that you have no power to require interstate carriers to use the block signals, because, if we have power to require them to use the block signals we would also have the power to require them to station a man with a red lantern at every hundred feet. But that would be absurd. have the power, but we would not pass a law requiring them to station men at every hundred feet with red lanterns because it would be absurd, and if we did such a thing as that the people would put us out of office.

And yet that is the argument used against this bill. The argument that is used against this bill can exclude, by the process of reductio ad absurdum, the power to require us to compel interstate carriers to use the block signals, because if we admit we have that power then we might require them to place a man with a red lantern every hundred feet.

Mr. President, if we have the power to require automatic couplings-and we have actually exercised that power-we also have the power to require all the railroads to use electric engines, which is absurd. Therefore, according to the argument of the Senator from Wisconsin, we have no such power to require them to use automatic couplings, because if we admit that power we must admit that it might be exercised unwisely. "Where is the limit?" asks the Senator from Wisconsin. The limit is in our common sense and in our responsibility to our constituents. If we do exercise our power unwisely the remedy is in the hands of the American people at the ballot box.

WHY ARE WE SO FEARFUL OF OURSELVES?

Why is it that gentlemen are afraid of what we here may do? Are we a conspiracy against the people of the United States? And if we are, have the people of the United States no control over their Government themselves? Why are we afraid of ourselves? Do we not come from and represent the people and are we not answerable to them solely? If not, whom do we come from and to whom are we answerable?

The Senator from Wisconsin made the proper answer to the Senator from Texas to the absurd question that he asked me when he said it is "an impossible question; it is not to be believed that Congress will ever pass such laws," said the Senator from Wisconsin. That is what he said in the debate on the oleomargarine bill, which benefited the dairymen of Wisconsin. And yet he asks the same question now that he answered then, although this law benefits the Nation and all humanity.

Now, Mr. President, because I want to conclude, I am going merely to hold up and refer first to three laws that we passed last year-first, the meat law, which actually goes into the factories of a State and requires National inspection and prohibits the transportation of meats that are not inspected. does not prohibit the transportation of diseased meats alone, mind you. That is not the power. It prohibits the transporta-tion of all meat, wholesome or unwholesome, that is uninspected. If the meat is wholesome but uninspected and injures nobody at either end of the line, still it is prohibited.

So the power does not spring out of the nature of the commerce. Is any member of the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate—one of whom has overruled the Supreme Court this afternoon-proposing to question the validity of the meat law?

Why were not these laws I have cited, which prohibit interstate commerce in certain things, referred to the Judiciary Committee as to their constitutionality? The meat bill is far more questionable in its constitutionality than the child-labor

Here is the railroad-rate law, Mr. President. It is positively packed with illustrations about the absurdity of the argument of the abuse of power. For example, it says here that the Commission may, upon any notice it pleases, do so-and-so. if upon any notice, then upon one hour, or one second, or the fraction of a second; and, therefore, I suppose the power does not exist. But it is not to be supposed that the Interstate Commerce Commission is going to do a foolish and unreasonable thing. That is the answer to that. But if they-the Interstate Commerce Commission—are not supposed to act foolishly and unreasonably, are we supposed to act foolishly and unreasonably-we, the Senate of the United States? Yet the Senators seem to fear that we will, although they are sure the Interstate Commerce Commission will not, because we have armed that body with power to act very foolishly indeed.

So, Mr. President, it is not a question of power. we have. It has been so held by decision after decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] this afternoon could only avoid by saying that one decision of the United States Supreme Court is wrong. It has been exercised by ourselves in over a dozen cases by express statute, directly and emphatically prohibiting the transportation in interstate commerce of any articles that Congress thought it was wise to prohibit.

So the power exists. It is a question of policy. But, Mr. President, all the time taken by me has been wasted if I have not demonstrated to the Senate that if we had the power it is not only good policy, but it is a matter of duty for us to pass the law which will end this infamy, which is existing in this country as greatly to-day as it did in England one hundred and ten or one hundred and fifteen years ago.

I find no difficulty, having gone through these debates-having gone through these decisions. Senators seem to think that the words "delegated power" and "constitutional government" some mysterious means by which the progress of the people and the safety of the people are impeded. It is a curious thing to me that in not one of these instances was the constitutionality of any statute raised where no business interests were affected by it.

It is a curious thing to me that every constitutional fight that has been made in the Supreme Court has always been made against laws prohibiting something in interstate commerce only when some business interest was affected by it.

Mr. President, all the subjects we have before us are important, but not one of them is a fraction as important as the suppression of this great evil, which involves the crime of murder, and which involves the degeneracy of American citizens by not only thousands, but by the hundred thousand. I do not think of any difficulty in prohibiting and relieving it by this method.

PURPOSE OF FREE INSTITUTIONS.

Why, Mr. President, when I think about these things I sometimes wonder what is the purpose of these "free institutions" about which we talk so much. Why was it that this Republic was established? What does the flag stand for?

Mr. President, what do all these things mean? They mean that the people shall be free to correct human abuses.

They mean that men and women and children shall day by day grow stronger and nobler.

They mean that we shall have the power to make this America of ours each day a lovelier place to live in.

They mean the realities of liberty, and not the academics of theory. They mean the actual progress of the race in the tangible items of real existence, and not the theoretics of disputation. If they do not mean these things, Mr. President, then our institutions, this Republic, our flag, have no meaning and no reason for existence.

Mr. President, to see this Republic of free and equal men and women grow increasingly, with each day and year, as the mightiest power for righteousness in the world has been, and is, and always will be, I pray God, the passion of my life—a Nation of strong, pure human beings; a Nation of wholesome homes, true to the holiest ideals of man; a Nation whose power is glorified by its justice, and whose justice is the conscience of scores of millions of free, strong, brave people.

It is to make this people such a Nation that all our wars have been fought, all our heroes have died, all our permanent laws have been written, all our statesmen have planned, and our people themselves have striven.

It was to make such a Nation as this that the old Articles of Confederation were thrown away and the Constitution of the United States, about which we debate so much, was adopted.

Mr. President, it is to make this Nation still surer of this holy destiny that I have presented this bill to stop the murder of American children and the ruin of future American citizens. [Applause in the galleries.]

During the delivery of Mr. Beverioge's speech,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 7709) to revise, codify, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

Mr. FULTON. When I called up this bill the other day and it was placed before the Senate, I doubted somewhat whether we would be able to give it consideration at the present session, but I hoped we might be able to do so. I have now become satisfied that it will not be possible to give it that consideration which the importance of the measure requires, and, so far as I am con-cerned, I am not willing to hold it here in a position where it interferes with other business when there is no reasonable chance for its consideration. I have therefore concluded to ask that it may go to the Calendar. Mr. PERKINS. Under Rule

Under Rule IX? Under Rule IX. Mr. FULTON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Oregon the bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

At the conclusion of Mr. Beveringe's speech,

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, on yesterday afternoon a unanimous-consent agreement was reached, which I regret to say has turned out to be somewhat in conflict with the previous arrangement of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. of the conflict, which unhappily sprung up between that unani-mous-consent agreement and the desires of the Senator from Maine, I will for this evening waive the privilege accorded to me by unanimous consent, to the end that the appropriation bill in charge of the Senator from Maine may be proceeded with.

At this time I beg to announce that, if the convenience of the Senate will permit, I shall submit some observations immediately after the closing of the morning business to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I did not, of course, propose to interfere with the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter], but on account of what he has said, I now ask that the diplomatic appropriation bill be laid before the Senate.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I simply wish to say that, if it be entirely agreeable to the convenience of the Senate, I shall to-morrow, after the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter] has concluded, submit a few remarks upon the subject which has been discussed this evening by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE!

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I simply wish to suggest to both the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] that there is a bill on the Calendar, which was reported on June 18, 1906, which is a very important matter, and that I have given notice two or three different times that I would ask consideration for it. My last notice was that I should ask to have the bill taken up to-morrow. I presume, however, we can adjust the matter between ourselves.

Mr. CARMACK. I shall not seek to interfere with that bill or with anything else of importance.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 24538) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908; which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations may be first acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that course will be pursued.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in schedule A, under the subhead, "Salaries of ambassadors and ministers," on page 3, line 1, after the words "consul-general to," to strike out "the Dominican Republic" and insert "Santo Domingo;" so as to make the clause read:

Minister resident and consul-general to Santo Domingo, $10,000.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine if the item just read, fixing the salary of the minister resident and consul-general to Santo Domingo at $10,000, comes from the other House? I also ask him whether or not that is a change in existing law?

Mr. HALE. The House of Representatives has put up all of these salaries, which heretofore have been $7,500, to $10,000.

Mr. KEAN.

Yes; all of them.

That has been done in all these cases, and the Mr. HALE. committee of the Senate accepted the action of the House.

Mr. BACON. I simply asked for information. The proposition, then, is not to merely increase the salary in this particular case?

Mr. HALE. No; to increase it in all of these instances.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 3, line 12, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the provision in the diplomatic and consular appropriation act, approved March 1, 1893, that "whenever the President shall be advised that any foreign government is represented, or is about to be represented, in the United States by an ambassador, envoy extraordinary, minister plenipotentiary, minister resident, special envoy, or chargé d'affaires, he is authorized, in his discretion, to direct that the representative of the United States to such government shall bear the same designation," is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Salaries of secretaries of embassies and legations," on page 4, line 9, after the word "Portugal," to strike out "the Dominican Republic" and insert "Santo Domingo;" so as to make the clause read:

Secretaries of legation to Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Cuba, Denmark, Guatemala, Honduras and Salvador, Liberia, Morocco, Norway, Panama, Peru, Portugal, Santo Domingo, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, and Venezuela, at $2,000 cach, $36,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of the clause in relation to the salaries and necessary expenses of the judge and district attorney of the United States court for China, on page 17, line 12.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Maine whether the clause that provides for the expenses of the judge of the United States court for China is guarded in the same way that the Appropriations Committee, I think, subsequent to the impeachment trial of Judge Swayne guarded appropriations for similar expenses when made by judges of the courts in the United States? If I am not mistaken, this is the language of the old clause as it existed prior to the trial of Judge Swayne, and I think after that trial the Appropriations Committee, in drafting appropriation bills, put in some language intended more rigidly to restrict judges in the payment for expenses to their actual expenses. The Senator will remember that on the trial of the Swayne case there was considerable contention upon the question whether or not this language did not justify what had grown up to be the practice of judges to put in bills for $10 a day, regardless of what their actual expenses may have been.

Mr. HALE. Suppose we put in the word "actual?"
Mr. BACON. I have forgotten what the language was; but the Senator from Maine or some other member of the Committee on Appropriations was instrumental in having the language changed.

Mr. LODGE. The word "actual," instead of "necessary," would cover it.

That would leave it so that the conferees, if they Mr. HALE. wanted to put in any additional words, could do so.

Mr. BACON. So that they can refer to the language of the act as it was phrased in the appropriation bill subsequent to the impeachment trial.

Mr. LODGE. To cover the matter I move, on page 17, line 8, before the word "expenses," to strike out "necessary" and insert "actual."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 17, line 8, before the word "expenses," it is proposed to strike out "necessary" and insert "actual;" so as to make the clause read:

The judge of the said court and the district attorney shall, when the sessions of the court are held at other cities than Shanghal, receive in addition to their salaries their actual expenses during such sessions, not to exceed $10 per day for the judge and $5 per day for the district attorney, and so much as may be necessary during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, is hereby appropriated.

Mr. HALE. I think that is an improvement.

The amendment was agreed to:

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of the following clause:

For the more effective demarcation and mapping of the boundary line between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, as es-tablished under existing treaties, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, and to be immediately available and con-tinue available until expended, $20,000, or so much thereof as may be

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill as to the necessity of putting in the provision appropriating $20,000 in relation to the boundary line between Canada and the United States.

Mr. HALE. The necessity for it is submitted by the State epartment. They are engaged in that work, as the Senator knows, all the time, and we are spending so much money to perfect certain points in the line of boundary. I do not know the details. The boundaries are settled, but there are points to be established.

Mr. BACON, I am sorry I can not hear the Senator, as I want to ask a question about the matter myself.

Mr. HALE. I was saying that the Department thinks so much money is needed to establish certain points in the boundary that was fixed, so far as the treaty goes, by the inter-The appropriation is only to locate these national conference. points upon the map.

Mr. BACON. Now, if the Senator will pardon me, I desire to ask attention to the provision on page 15-

Mr. HOPKINS. If the Senator will allow me to con-

I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does this have reference to the International Commission that has made a report?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the boundary between Canada and the United States has been established by various treaties the Ashburton treaty and other treaties—and this is simply for the preservation and marking of the existing boundary lines. It has nothing whatever to do with the Niagara question.

Mr. HOPKINS. The thought struck me, Why should it happen to come up at this particular time? I understand, of course, as every other Senator does, that we have treaty arrangements with Great Britain with reference to the boundary line there.

Mr. LODGE. The lines are all settled.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is what I supposed, and hence I did not see any necessity for making this appropriation.

Mr. LODGE. This is necessary where points and marks have been destroyed or moved. It is simply to perfect the marking of the line and preserve the line. That is all, as I understand.
Mr. HALE. To put the marks on the face of the earth, so that maps may be made.

Mr. BACON. I understand that the appropriation beginning in line 4 on page 15 is for surveys, and the item under discussion is for the mapping and marking of the surveys already made. Am I correct in that? Is there a difference between the two? The two provisions would appear on first glance to relate to the same thing.

Mr. GALLINGER. The one on page 15 refers to the Alaskan boundary

Mr. HOPKINS. That does not have any relation to the item on page 17, does it?

Mr. HALE. No; it is another matter entirely.
Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the language on page 15 is:

To enable the Secretary of State to mark the boundary and make the surveys incidental thereto between the Territory of Alaska and the Dominion of Canada, etc.

The differentiation, I suppose, is between Alaska and the United States. Is that intended?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, under the Alaskan boundary tribunal certain points were agreed upon running through a great stretch of country—certain mountain peaks stretching hundreds of miles. The line had to be laid out by surveyors, the peaks being given. That has been in process for the last three years, and it is not yet completed. Our Coast Survey and the surveyor-general of Canada are running that line together and marking it as they go. The Canadian line, to which the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins] referred, is a perfectly established line, and I understand it is only to mark that so that it can be mapped.

Mr. NELSON. From the Portland Canal to the one hundred and forty-first meridian west longitude.

Mr. HALE. It is to make practical and visible the result of the work of the Commission.

Mr. BACON. Of previous surveys? Mr. HALE. Yes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in Schedule C, under the subhead "Allowance for clerk hire at United States consulates," on page 19, after line 8, to strike out:

Allowance for clerk hire at consulates, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, $241,890: Provided, That the total sum expended in one year shall not exceed the amount appropriated.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For allowance for clerk hire at consulates as follows:

For allowance for clerk hire at consulates as follows:
London, $4,500.
Paris, $4,000.
Habana and Liverpool, $3,000 each, $6,000.
Mexico City, Rio de Janeiro, and Shanghai, at $2,500 each, $7,500.
Hongkong and Yokohama, at $2,200 each, $4,400.
Berlin, Bordeaux, Bradford, Canton, Cape Town, Manchester, and Seoul, at $1,800 each, $12,600.
Southampton, $1,750.
Antwerp, Bahia, Brussels, Hamburg, Kobé, Lyons, Monterey, Montreal, Ottawa, Para, Pernambuco, Rotterdam, and Santos, at $1,500 each, $19,500.

Barmen, Birmingham, Bremen, Chemnitz, Coburg, Colon, Crefeld, Dawson, Frankfort, Havre, Marseilles, Panama, and Vienna, at $1,200 each, $15,600.

Belfast, Calcutta, Cairo, Dresden, Glasgow, Guayaquil, Naples, Nottingham, Nuremburg, Plauen, Pretoria, Reichenberg, St. Gall, Sheffield, Singapore, Sydney (New South Wales), Toronto, and Vera Cruz, at $1,000 each, $18,000.

Annaberg, Beirut, Buenos Ayres, Burslem, Dundee, Edinburgh, Genoa, Kingston (Jamaica), Leipsic, Mainz, Mannheim, Maracaibo, Melbourne, Messina, Newcastie-on-Tyne, Palerme, Port au Prince, Prague, Rome, Santiago de Cuba, Smyrna, Stockholm, Tangier, Vancouver, and Victoria, at $800 each, $20,000.

Mr. NELSON. I suggest a further amendment to the amendment, in line 21, after the word "thousand," to insert the words "eight hundred."

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, if I understand the Senator—and I think I do—the amendment simply takes the total sum appropriated by the House, on page 19, lines 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13, and specifies how it is to be appropriated.

Mr. HALE. Just as we always have heretofore. Mr. CLAY. That is what I thought.

Mr. GALLINGER. The total in line 9, of the amendment of the committee, page 21, should be changed to correspond to the amendment already made. I move to strike out the words "one hundred and twenty-seven thousand two hundred and ten dollars" and insert "one hundred and twenty-eight thousand and ten dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 23821) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Fortifications and other works of defense," on page 2, line 9, to increase the appropriation for construction of firecontrol stations and accessories, including purchase of lands and rights of way, and for the purchase, installation, operation, and maintenance of necessary lines and means of electrical communication connected with the use of coast artillery, etc., from $700,000 to $1,200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 15, to increase the appropriation for the protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications for which there may be no special appropriation available from $200,000 to $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 15, to insert: Toward the construction of about 4.800 linear feet of wall necessary for the protection of Fort Moultrie, Sullivans Island, North Carolina, from the effects of storms (to cost not to exceed $225,600), $112,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 21, to insert:

Toward the building of sea walls for the protection of the sites of the fortifications and of the necessary post buildings at Forts Pickens and McRee, Pensacola Harbor, Florida (to cost not to exceed $907,100), $453,550.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 2, to insert:

Toward the repair and restoration of batteries and other structures appurtenant to the defenses of Pensacola and for retaining walls to protect the batteries from floods (to cost not to exceed $109,355), $54,678.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 8, to insert:

Toward the repair and restoration of batteries and other structures appurtenant to the dafenses of Mobile. Ala., and for rebuilding sea walls and groins for protection of the sites of the fortifications and of the garrison posts (to cost not to exceed $1,089,500), $544,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 15, to insert:

For rebuilding and strengthening the levees for protection of the site of the defenses and the garrison post at Fort St. Philip, New Orleans, La., $139,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Armament of fortifications," on page 6, after line 14, to insert:

For replacing and overhauling ammunition, and for replacing or repairing instruments for fire control, tools, and other ordnance property destroyed or damaged by the storm of September 26-28, 1906, at Forts Pickens and McRee, Fla.; Forts Morgan and Gaines, Ala.; and Fort St. Philip, La., $30,878.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to these amendments which have just been agreed to. My understanding was that the total sums were to be appropriated and only 50 per cent to be made available this year, but it appears from the amendments, in the way they are drawn, that only 50 per cent is appropriated, and the simple statement is made that the entire cost is not to exceed the sums stated.

Mr. PERKINS. I will say to my friend the Senator from Georgia that the estimates came to us from the Secretary of War to make good the damage caused by the hurricane which recently visited the Southern States. We have stated the full amount of the cost, but have made available for this year only 50 per cent of the amount estimated by the Department, which, your committee have been informed, is all that can be advantageously expended during the coming fiscal year.

I will say to the Senator from Georgia that I think we are in full accord with his views.

Mr. CLAY. I understand the Senator from California and the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale] to state that this is the usual way in which these items are drawn; that this simply means that we appropriate one-half the money at this session of Congress, and then another sum equal to it will be appropriated at the next session, provided the total cost shall not exceed the amount set forth in the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. That is the understanding of your committee,

Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 6, after line 22, to insert:

For converting muzzle-loading field guns to breech-loading guns for saluting purposes, and for necessary mounts for the same, $5,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 7, to insert:

Section 2 of the act approved May 19, 1882, authorizing the Secretary of War to issue, on the requisition of the governor of a State bordering on the sea or Gulf coast, and having a permanent camping ground for the enactment of the militia not less than six days annually, two heavy guns and four mortars, with carriages and platforms, for their instruction, and for the construction of a suitable battery for the cannon so issued, and appropriating $5.000 for each State to carry out the above-mentioned objects, is hereby repealed: Provided, That this repeal shall not affect the existing law regarding the disposition of the cannon and other stores already issued.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Fortifications in insular possessions," on page 8, after line 21, to strike out:

For construction of seacoast batteries in Hawaiian and Philippine islands, $600,000.

And insert:

For construction of seacoast batteries in the Hawaiian Islands, $100,000.

Mr. PERKINS. CINS. On behalf of the committee I move to strike and insert "two;" so as to read "two hundred " one " thousand dollars."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I have not been following the reading of the bill, but we have had under discussion a good many times, as Senator will remember, questions relating to the defense of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. PERKINS. This is for the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. BACON. I thought it was for the Philippine Islands. Mr. PERKINS. No. In accordance with the Senator's suggestion, we have thought that the Hawaiian Islands, being nearer to us and dearer to us and being a Territory of our Government, they should be divorced from any association, so far as this appropriation is concerned, with the Philippine Islands.

Mr. BACON. I think the committee has acted with entire wisdom and propriety. I hope they will continue to be divorced; and I should like to have the divorce made not simply temporary, but permanent.

Mr. PERKINS. That question is now pending in the court of public opinion.

Mr. BACON. I should like to inquire of the Senator, if I do not trespass too far upon his time

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. PERKINS. With great pleasure.

I was not following the reading of the bill. only caught this appropriation, which arrested my attention. I will inquire whether there is in the bill an appropriation for the fortification of any part of the Philippine Islands?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; $500,000, in the Bay of Manila only.

Mr. BACON. Is it limited to that?

Mr. PERKINS. That is about 5 per cent of what was asked for.

I have no criticism to make upon that at all. Mr. BACON. I was simply going to suggest the propriety of a limitation as to the place as well as to the amount.

Mr. PERKINS. The Senator will note that the committee, having in view the wishes of the Senator from Georgia, has on page 7, provided for the Philippine Islands, and has directed that the fortifications shall be made in the harbor of Manila. I am sure the provision will meet with the approval of my friend the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. The limitation does, entirely.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to. The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the top of page 9, to insert the following:

. For construction of seacoast batteries at Manila, in the Philippine Islands, $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE N. JULIAN.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (8, 7998) granting an increase of pension to George N. Julian. This is a very urgent and meritorious case.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "Infantry," to strike out "and assistant inspector-general;" so as to make the bill

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George N. Julian, late captain Company E. Thirteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

MONONGAHELA RIVER BRIDGE.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN PENNINGTON COUNTY, S. DAK.

Dak., from the operation of the provisions of section 4 of an act approved June 11, 1906, entitled "An act to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves."

Mr. CULLOM. It will not take any time?

Mr. KITTREDGE. It will not take any time.

BLACKFEET INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7674) to survey and allot the lands embraced within the limits of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and to open the surplus lands to settlement. A bill with the same object in view passed both Houses of Congress last year and was vetoed by the President.

Mr. KEAN. Will it occasion any discussion, I will ask the Senator?

Mr. CLARK of Montana. I am sure it will not. both Houses of Congress last year and was objected to by the President and vetoed by him. We have, I am satisfied, covered the objectionable features, so that it will be all right,

Mr. CULLOM. It is a pretty long bill. I rose to move an executive session, but if it will not take any considerable time,

I have no objection to yielding.

Mr. LODGE. Did I understand the Senator from Montana to state that the only objection that has ever been made to this bill is that the President vetoed it?

Mr. CLARK of Montana. It was vetoed by the President on account of the fact, as he deemed, that it did not afford sufficient protection to the water rights of the Indians. But I am satisfied that that objection has been covered, and the bill is unanimously approved by the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its con-

APPEAL CASES FROM THE DISTRICT COURT, ALASKA.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 24747) providing for the hearing of cases upon appeal from the district court for the district of Alaska in the circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit.

Be it enacted, etc. That hereafter all appeals, writs of error, and other cases coming from the district court for the district of Alaska to the circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit shall be entered upon the docket and heard at San Francisco, in the State of California, or at Portland, in the State of Oregon, or at Seattle, in the State of Washington, as the trial court before whom the case was tried below shall fix and determine: Provided, however, That at any time before the hearing of any appeal, writ of error, or other case, the parties thereto, through their respective attorneys, may stipulate at which of the above-named places the same shall be heard, in which case the case shall be remitted to and entered upon the docket at the place so stipulated and shall be heard there.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a little explanation of the bill from the gentleman from Washington, if it

The SPEAKER. It is not too late.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Washington whether under existing law all of these appeals go to San Francisco as a matter of course?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. They do.

Mr. LACEY. None go to Seattle or Portland as the law now stands?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; as a matter of fact, they do not. There has been but one case heard out of San Francisco in several years.

Mr. LACEY. How could a case under the existing law be heard in Portland?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It could be heard by a stipulation of all parties concerned.
Mr. LACEY. But not otherwise?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. But not otherwise.

Mr. LACEY. And under this bill, in the absence of any stipulation at all on the subject, an appeal taken from either the courts of Alaska—where would it go as a matter of course?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The trial court would determine where it should be heard, unless the parties should stipulate as to where it is to go.

Mr. LACEY. The judges before whom the cases were tried would be the same anyhow?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It only fixes the place and not the court.

And they would consult, therefore, the convenience of counsel and parties as to whether Seattle, Portland, or San Francisco should be selected?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is the object of the bill, and it is agreed upon.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES H. STOCKLEY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 9577) entitled "An act for the relief of Charles H. Stockley," with a Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

"Sec. 7. That this act shall be null and void unless the construction of said bridge shall be commenced within one year from the passage of this act and shall be completed within four years from the passage of this act."

Also the following amendment:

On page 2, line 3, strike out the words "within four years from the passage of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "by March 14, 1908."

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This bill is unanimously reported, is it?

Mr. WANGER. Unanimously.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Wanger, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ASSISTANT APPRAISERS, PORT OF NEW YORK.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 7147.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 7147, of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (8.7147) to amend section 2536 of the Revised Statutes, relative to assistant appraisers at the port of New York, and further defining their powers, duties, and compensation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is this bill? Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, the bill comes from the Committee on Ways and Means, I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Williams], with unanimous consent. If the gentleman desires any further explanation I will be glad to

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was read a third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Sherman, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JAMESTOWN EXPOSITION.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 24541, an act making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies, amended by the Senate, be taken from the Speaker's table and be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the urgent deficiency bill, with Senate amendment, may be taken from the Speaker's table and considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the object to be attained by the gentleman's motion?

To facilitate the consideration of a gen-Mr. LITTAUER. eral appropriation bill passed by the House, to which the Senate added one amendment, and that amendment concerns the provision for the Jamestown Exposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why is it desired to be considered in the House instead of in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. LITTAUER. Simply as a matter of expedition.

. Mr. WILLIAMS. Why would it not be well to consider it in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. LITTAUER. I do not know but that it would be just as well that way as another, and we can get a record vote on

Mr. WILLIAMS. Unless there is some special reason, the ordinary course ought to be pursued.

Mr. LITTAUER. This expedites the business of the House and permits us to have a record vote in the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall not object.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will this give us an opportunity to discuss this bill if it is considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. It is entirely, if the consent is given, under the direction of the majority of the House under the five-

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I should like to have thirty minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that unanimous consent has been given?

The SPEAKER. It has not. Mr. MACON. I want to hear the provision read before I give my consent.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 24541) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes.

The Senate amendment was read at length.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I want to amplify my request for unanimous consent, by asking that the five-minute limitation of debate should not apply to the consideration of this measure in the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York modifies his request as to the consideration of the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole, that the five-minute rule should not

Mr. SIMS. I wish to ask the gentleman, reserving the right to object, if the consideration of this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole will afford opportunity for debate? In other words, can not the previous question be called at any moment by the gentleman in charge of the measure if it is considered in the House?

Mr. LITTAUER. I will ask the Chair to answer that ques-

The SPEAKER. Oh, undoubtedly, the majority of the House will control. It is under the control of the majority—
Mr. SIMS. And if the gentleman in charge of the bill demands the previous question, that would close debate?

Mr. TAWNEY. Not unless the majority of the House sustains the demand; but there is no purpose to cut off free dis-

Mr. LITTAUER. We have no idea of curtailing debate.
Mr. SIMS. Well, Mr. Speaker, it will be left entirely with the gentleman in control of the bill to say that nobody shall occupy any of the time except those he sees proper to yield to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman, there should be no misunderstanding about the effect of this request. The Chair understands that if unanimous consent is given, then the consideration is had in the Committee of the Whole House without regard to the five-minute rule, and it is entirely in the power of the House to say when it will vote, and on what it will vote, and on the entire matter.

Well, Mr. Speaker, what difference would there Mr. SIMS. be about considering it in the House as in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. MANN. It would have to go to the Committee on Appropriations, and it could not be considered to-day.

Mr. SIMS. It could not be considered? Why could it not be considered to-day in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. LITTAUER. This simply expedites the disposition

Mr. MANN. Unless unanimous consent be given, it would have to go to the Committee on Appropriations, and it could not be considered to-day

Mr. SIMS. It is simply a proposition as to whether we can have it fully debated.

Mr. LITTAUER. We have no disposition to cut off any debate.

Mr. JAMES. We can get a yea-and-nay vote on it in the House, and we can not in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MACON. I want to ask the gentleman from New York if this is the same character of loan that was made to the World's Fair Exposition at St. Louis?

Mr. LITTAUER. It is a loan.
Mr. MACON. Is it the same character of loan?
Mr. LITTAUER. I do not want to say it is the same character of loan. But that is a matter that concerns the merits of the proposition, and I do not want at this time to discuss

Mr. MACON. Has it similar safeguards thrown around it? Mr. LITTAUER. Not such as I yet deem sufficient, I will say to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I object.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont objects.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

This motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. Foster of Vermont in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 24815—the agricultural appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

of the bill H. R. 24815—the agricultural appropriation bill. The Clerk read as follows:

Purchase and distribution of rare and valuable seeds: For the purchase, propagation, and testing of new, rare, and uncommon seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, foreign and domestic; for the rent of buildings (not to exceed $3,000); the employment of agricultural explorers, local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and all other necessary labor required in the city of Washington and elsewhere; the purchase of necessaryy office fixtures and supplies, paper, twine, gum, printing, postal cards, fuel, gas and electric current, transportation, traveling expenses, and all necessary material for securing, testing, propagating, packing, and distributing the seeds, bulbs, trees, etc., above specified, $238,000. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to spend the said sum, as nearly as practicable, for the encouragement and advancement of agriculture and horticulture throughout the United States, through the systematic introduction of new, rare, or uncommon seeds, bulbs, trees, vines, cuttings, etc., in the establishment of new or the improvement of existing plant industries; in collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results obtained through the testing and distribution of new and rare seeds, bulbs, and plants herein provided for; and the Secretary of Agriculture is further directed to purchase such new and rare seeds, bulbs, plants, vines, and cuttings at public or private sale, and to arrange for the propagation, testing, and distribution of such seeds, bulbs, plants, and cuttings in such manner as he may deem expedient, obtaining, so far as practicable, the advice and cooperation of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress: Provided, That such seeds, bulbs, and plants shall be distributed to actual experimenters for experimental tests, and that the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause a record to be kept of all persons to whom seeds, bulbs, or plants are sent, in ord order upon a portion of the paragraph.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, one moment. arrive at some agreement as to the time to be devoted to the consideration of this paragraph and this amendment? I think the House understands the question thoroughly.

Mr. MANN. I am just going to make the point of order. Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman will have an opportunity to make his point of order.

Mr. MANN. Not after debate commences. I wish to state my point of order without losing my right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order upon that portion of ne paragraph commencing with line 17, page 35, "And the

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order upon that portion of the paragraph commencing with line 17, page 35, "And the Secretary of Agriculture," down to and including the words "United States," in line 20, page 36.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not care to debate the point of order, Mr. Chairman. If that power is not granted under the general powers granted in the law establishing the Department of Agriculture, I do not think any power is granted. The question has been thrashed out several times.

Mr. MANN. It is very likely that the power is granted to the Secretary of Agriculture in reference to the distribution of these seeds, bulbs, and so forth, but it is very certain that if the Secretary of Agriculture has now the authority to act under the law this changes his authority. This gives to him a specific direction as to how he shall act. If his authority is now unlimited, then this is a change of existing law by the limitation of his authority. If he has now no authority, then this is an expansion of his authority and is contrary to the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.
Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman—
Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to reserve a point of order against the language in line 9, "agricultural explorers."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi has the

Mr. CANDLER. I move to strike out— Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order against the language "agricultural explorers," in line 9, page 25.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves the point of order.

If the point of order is made against a part Mr. GILLETT. of a paragraph, does not the whole paragraph go out?

Not unless the point of order is made The CHAIRMAN. against the whole paragraph.

Mr. GILLETT. I make a point of order against the whole paragraph

The CHAIRMAN. The point against the portion made by the gentleman from Illinois has been sustained. Now the gentleman from Massachusetts can make a point of order against the remainder, if he desires.

Mr. GILLETT. But, if the Chair will pardon me, the gentleman from Illinois made a point of order against a certain portion of the paragraph. Now, as I understand, under the general rule, that sends the whole paragraph out. Now, how am I to know

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Massachusetts is mistaken, and that unless the point of order is made against the whole paragraph the whole paragraph does not go out, but only that portion of the paragraph against which the point is made. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] made his point of order against a portion of the paragraph, and that point of order was sustained, and that portion of the paragraph has gone out under the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my colleague [Mr. CANDLER] be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi has the floor.

Mr. CANDLER. I move to strike out the provision left in the bill and to insert the following amendment-

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that that is not in order until the point of order of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Firzgerald] is determined. When that is decided, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Mississippi.

I did not know that was pending. I ask Mr. CANDLER.

that my amendment be considered as pending.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I desire to offer an amendment to the paragraph.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is not in order until the point of order is decided.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It has been decided.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a point of order pending. Mr. CRUMPACKER. Pending to the entire paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. Pending to a portion of the paragraph. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] care to be heard on his point of order?

I simply wished to ascertain what these Mr. FITZGERALD. explorers were. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York withdraws his point of order.

Mr. CANDLER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out and insert.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr.

MANN] withdraw his point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of order of the gentleman from Illinois, and that portion of the paragraph against which he made his point of order has gone

Mr. CANDLER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the provision left in the bill, and to insert the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Which is the old law.

Mr. CANDLER. Which is the old law.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which the Clerk will

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I think is preferential to the gentleman's motion to strike out and insert. His motion strikes out the entire paragraph and inserts a new one. We have a right to perfect the paragraph first.

Mr. CANDLER. I should like to have my amendment reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the paragraph and insert:

"Purchase and distribution of valuable seeds: For the purchase, propagation, testing, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants; for rent and repairs; the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required, in the city of Washington and elsewhere; all necessary office fixtures and supplies, fuel, transportation, paper, twine, gun, postal cards, gas, and electric current, traveling expenses, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same, and to be distributed in localities adapted to their culture, $238,000, of which amount not less than $202,000 shall be allotted for Congressional distribution. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum, as nearly as practicable, in the purchase, testing, and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, the best he can obtain at a public or private sale, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned, and in which same are to be distributed as hereinafter stated, and such seeds so purchased shall include a variety of field, vegetable, and flower seeds suitable for planting and culture in the various sections of the United States. An equal proportion of five-sixths of all seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall, upon their request, after due notification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the allotment to their respective districts is ready for distribution, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents, or mailed by the Department upon the receipt of their addressed franks, in packages of such weight as the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster-General may jointly determine, to the Postmaster-General; and the person receiving such seeds shall be requested to inform the Department of the results of the experiments therewith: Provided, That all seeds, bulbs, plants, and cuttings herein allotted to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution remaining uncalled for on the 1st of April shall be distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture, giving preference to those persons whose names and addresses have been furnished by Senators and Representatives in Congress, and who have not before, during the same season, been supplied by the Department: And provided also, That the Seeds allotted by the Secretary of Agriculture, givin

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to state in reference to this amendment-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I submit it comes too late. Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is too late to make the point of order. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Candler] had begun his argument, and had been recognized by the Chair. There had already been debate on the amendment.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the point of order comes too late, as I had already begun to address the House on the amendment, I had begun my argument. I had the floor and had been recognized by the Chair, and I did not yield the floor for the purpose for the gentleman to make a point of order or for any other purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois claim that he was on the floor?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I rose immediately upon the ceasing of the reading of the amendment. The gentleman was a little too hasty about commencing his address, endeavoring, I suppose, to protect his rights in the proper way. I do not see how I could have been any more lively.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Illinois states that he was endeavoring in good faith to get an opportunity to make the point of order, the Chair will entertain the point of

Mr. MANN. I certainly was.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the point of order. Has the gentleman reserved the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order ought to be decided, as there are other amendments to be made. There is no use of wasting time on the merits of this question if it be subject to the point of order. I think the gentleman ought to insist upon his point of order.

Mr. CANDLER. The gentleman from Illinois has not yet stated his point of order. I would like to have the point of order stated and have it determined at once.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will please state his point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is very plain, as far as the point of order is concerned. The ground is that it is new legislation upon this appropriation bill. While my understanding is that the amendment offered is the existing law, yet that does not make it in order at this time. Whatever may be the fact in reference to that, my point of order is that this is a change of existing law in that it affects the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture under the organic act creating that office. I have no desire to argue the point of order. I believe it was argued a year ago. I am not sure what was the disposition made of it at that time or whether this is the same amendment which was held to be in order a year ago.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, this same point of order was raised last year when the same gentleman occupied the chair who occupies it to-day. After a long discussion the point of order was withdrawn, as I hope it will be now. I appeal to the recollection of the Chair.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that this is the identical same proposition as was offered last year. It is in the same language, taken from the Book of Estimates as furnished by the Department of Agriculture to the Agricultural Committee for our consideration this year, drawn in the identical same language that was offered last year, except that there is a difference in the amount to be appropriated, and that is less than it was last year. It is drawn directly under the act creating the Department of Agriculture and has been the law, as has been stated by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Lamb], for thirty years. I don't know whether it is that long, but it has been for many, many years, and it is certainly authorized by statute, by custom, and has been adopted by this House. It was argued thoroughly last year, the same gentleman occupying the chair that now occupies the chair, but was finally withdrawn, and I hope it will be withdrawn again and let us have a vote.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to prevent the House voting upon a matter of this kind. There seems to be a desire to have a square test vote upon this proposition, which is of so much interest. Therefore I withdraw the point

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington renews the point of order.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, let us have a decision.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Washington is too late with his point of

The CHAIRMAN. This question was raised before the committee in almost similar terms a year ago, and was discussed It was admitted at that time that it was a close question. fully. Finally the point of order was withdrawn, and the Chair, therefore, was not called upon to rule. If this were a new question, it seems to the Chair that there could be no doubt in any mind as to the duty of the Chair to sustain the point of order. While, owing to some decisions and some precedents in the past, the question is somewhat complicated and there is some doubt about it, the Chair feels that this question should be determined by the House, once and for all, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I have very great respect for the opinion of the Chair and the highest personal regard for the gentleman who now occupies the chair; still I am constrained to respectfully appeal from the decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the " noes appeared to have it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. Wadsworth and Mr. Lamb were appointed tellers.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry before the vote is taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SCOTT. Am I right in this understanding, that the point of order is made against the substitute offered by the gentleman from Mississippi?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. SCOTT. That point has been sustained, and if the House sustains the Chair that substitute will go out.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. There will then remain for the House to vote upon that which remains of the present paragraph in the bill, with the exception of what has been stricken out in consequence of the point of order made by the gentleman from Chicago. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The question is, Shall the decision of the The CHAIRMAN.

Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 84, noes 136.
So the decision of the Chair was not sustained.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I now ask for a vote on the amendment

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire to offer his amendment?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; the pending amendment is good enough for me. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi. The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOREST SERVICE.

Salaries, Forest Service: One Forester, who shall be chief of Bureau, $4,500; one clerk, $2,100; one clerk, $1,900; five clerks, class 4, $9,000; three clerks, at $1,700 each, $5,100; one clerk, class 3, $1,600; two clerks, at $1,500 each, $3,000; two clerks, class 2, $2,800; one clerk, $1,300; eight clerks, class 1, $9,600; seven clerks, at $1,100 each, $7,700; eleven clerks, at $1,000 each, $11,000; twelve clerks, at $4,000 each, $15,200; twenty-seven clerks, at $700 each, $18,900; eighteen clerks, at $600 each, $15,200; twenty-seven clerks, at $700 each, $18,900; eighteen clerks, at $600 each, $1,200; one draftsman, $1,800; two draftsmen, at $1,400 each, $2,800; two draftsmen, at $1,400; one photographer, $1,000; one photographer, $1,000; one photographer, $1,200; one carpenter, $1,000; one carpenter, $720; three watchmen, at $700 each, $2,100; one electrician, $700; in all, $142,700.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the increase of salary in lines 2 and 3 on page 37. It is an increase from $3,500 to $4,500, and I make the point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York care to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Who made the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas. The Clerk will report the point of order.

The Clerk rend as follows:

The point of order is made against the language in lines 2 and 3, page 37, $4,500.

Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. Chairman, that is subject to the point of order. I stated in my report: "The following increases in existing statutory salaries have been allowed: Chief of Forest Service (Forester), $3,500 to $4,500." I stated in the note: "The increase in the salary of the Forester is justified not only by long and faithful service of the present incumbent of that office, but by reason of the greatly increased work put upon him by the transfer of the Government national forests to his care and administration." If the gentleman wants to raise the point of order in the face of that statement, he is at liberty to do so.

Mr. MACON. I do. The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MANN. What was the point of order made on-what was the salary?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. On the salary of $4,500.

Mr. MANN. Then that leaves the item out entirely. Does the gentleman from New York propose to offer an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York offer

Mr. WADSWORTH. On the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, that it takes the position entirely from the statutory roll, I now offer to reinsert the salary of $3,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In place of the language stricken out insert "$3,500."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In this Forestry Service there is an increase of about twenty-five clerks. Will the gentleman from New York state the reason for that increase?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am sorry to say I can not hear the gentleman very well, as there is so much disorder.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This Forestry Service provision contains an increase of twenty-five clerks.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is due entirely to the turning over to the Department of Agriculture the national forests of this country that were formerly managed by the Land Office of the Interior Department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman state when they were turned over?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, probably I misstated myself. do not wish to say the clerks of the Land Office were turned over, but the increase is necessary by reason of the turning over of the forest reserves to the Bureau of Forestry of the Agricul-

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman states that the forest reserves were turned over to the Department of Agriculture. About when was this done?

Mr. MANN. When did the act take effect turning over the forest reserves?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I asked if the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth] could state when the forest reserves were turned over to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WADSWORTH. By the act of February 1, 1905. Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman from New York know whether the clerks were transferred from the Department of the Interior to the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know that all of them were transferred. I dare say some of them were.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire, if possible, to ascertain that, because if these twenty-five additional clerks have been authorized for this Service because of the transfer to the Department of Agriculture of the forest reserves, certainly twenty-five clerks, or approximately that number, should be dropped from some office in the Department of the Interior.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me say to the gentleman that is not an increase of twenty-five clerks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I counted hastily. I find an increase of twenty-eight and a decrease of three in one class, and that makes a net increase of twenty-five.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That twenty-five clerks that the gentleman refers to is not an increase of twenty-five. There is still an increase of those $700 clerks, but it is not an increase of twenty-five or twenty-seven.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, there is an increase of five at $600 each, seven at $700 each, three at $900 each, two at $1,100 each, and three of class 1, at $1,200 each, and so on.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman will notice that that is arranged so as to afford a flow of promotions of the lower clerks at $600, $700, $800, $900, $1,000, and $1,100, and class 1 is a $1,200 salary clerk. Mr. LAMB. Wi

Will the chairman permit a suggestion?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.
Mr. LAMB. If he will bear in mind the testimony of the Chief of Forestry, he said these clerks were necessary by reason of the extension of the work.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I stated that to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the chairman of the committee made that clear, but he also makes the statement that this increase is due to the fact that the Forest Service has been transferred from the Department of the Interior to the Department of Agriculture. If this work has been done in the Department of the Interior and has been taken from that Department, there certainly should be a number of clerks, between twenty and twenty-five, I assume, that should have been dropped from the Department of the Interior since this work has been taken up by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think I have answered the gentleman by saying that the twenty-five do not represent an actual increase of twenty-five. There is some increase there of a few clerks, but if the gentleman will refer to the statutory salary roll of last year he will see that the roll was $112,860, so that there is an increase of $29,000.

Mr. MANN. That would just about cover the twenty-five clerks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That just about covers the twenty-five clerks, because five of them are at $600 each, seven at $700 each, and so on, so that the $29,000 just covers the twenty-five clerks, and the increase in compensation of one or two officials. sire to ascertain, if possible, whether the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture knew that by reason of this increase of this particular service there was a corresponding decrease in the office from which this work was taken.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am frank to say to the gentleman I can not give him any information on that point.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I not ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]—

The CHAIRMAN Description of the control of the

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman want to amend this by changing the total from $42,000 to $41,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; I will come to that. I will ask that the Clerk change the total of that salary list by $1,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 38; line 14, instead of "one hundred and forty-two thousand," make it read "one hundred and forty-one thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter 10 per cent of all money received from each national forest during any fiscal year shall be paid at the end thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State or Territory in which said national forest is situated, to be expended as the State or Territorial legislature may prescribe for the benefit of the public schools and public roads of the county or counties in which the said national forest is situated: Provided, That when any national forest is in more than one State or Territory or county the distributive share to each from the proceeds of said forest shall be proportional to its area therein: And provided further, That there shall not be paid to any State or Territory for any county an amount equal to more than 40 per cent of the total income of such county from all other sources.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the word "hereafter" in line 10, page 39.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is subject to the point of order. is simply the same question we discussed on Saturday about the meat-inspection act. If the gentleman desires to make it, it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. MANN. This is an entirely different proposition. This is a provision to make a permanent appropriation, and I shall make the point of order on every item of that kind I can.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

To ascertain the natural conditions upon and utilize the national forests, and hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture may divide all lands in national forests into such specific national forests as he may deem best from time to time for administrative purposes, and give to each such name as may be convenient; and hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, permit timber and other forest products cut or removed from the national forests of the United States, except the Black Hills National Forest in South Dakota, to be exported from the State, Territory, or the district of Alaska, in which said forests are respectively situated: *Provided,* That the exportation of dead and insect-infected timber only from said Black Hills National Forest shall be allowed until such time as the Forester shall certify that the ravages of the destructive insects in said forest are practically checked, but in no case after July 4, 1908; and hereafter all moneys received as contributions toward cooperative work in forest investigations and in the protection and improvement of the national forests shall be covered into the Treasury and shall constitute a special fund, which is hereby appropriated and made available until expended as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, for the payment of the expenses of said investigation, protection, and improvement by the Forest Service, and for refunds to the contributors of amounts heretofore or hereafter paid in by them in excess of their share of the cost of said investigations, protection, and improvement; to transport and care for fish and game supplied to stock the mational forests or the waters therein; to employ fiscal and other agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in practical forestry, in the administration of national forests, and in conducting experiments and investigations in the city of Washington and elsewhere; and hereafter he may dispose of photographic prints (includi

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order to that portion of the paragraph just read, beginning with line 1, page 40, down to and including the word "convenient," in line 4, which language reads as follows:

may divide all lands in national forests into such specific national forests as he may deem best from time to time for administrative purposes, and give to each such names as may be convenient.

I make the point of order against that language on the ground that it is new legislation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, it is new legislation, but it is a matter of a great deal of importance.

Mr. MANN. There are other points I desire to reserve.

Mr. TAWNEY. One moment. I also desire to make the point of order to that portion of the paragraph beginning with line 15, after the word "eight," down to and including the word "fish," in line 25.

Mr. MANN. You ought not to end there.
Mr. WADSWORTH. Suppose we consider the points of order as they are raised.

Mr. MANN. All points of order to the paragraph should first

Mr. TAWNEY. I also want-

Mr. MANN. I wish to make a point of order.

TAWNEY. I want to reserve the point of order, or I will make the point of order, on the language on page 41, beginning in line 2 with the words—to employ fiscal and other agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in practical forestry, in the administration of national forests, and in conducting experiments and investigations in the city of

That is in violation of the act of 1902, which expressly prohibits the employment of personal services here in the city of Washington out of a lump-sum appropriation. That is a change of existing law.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order upon the paragraph commencing after the word "year," in line 5, page 42, down to the end of the paragraph.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, Mr. Chairman, which point of order will gentlemen consider first?

The CHAIRMAN. Take them up in their order.

FITZGERALD. I want to make the point of order against the words "periodicals for circulating library for officers of the Forest Service stationed outside of Washington."

The CHAIRMAN. What is the proposition of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My point of order lies to the language in lines 15 and 16 of page 41.

Mr. TAWNEY. In my first point of order I desire to include the language of line 25, page 39, beginning with the words 'and hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture may," etc. Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is new legistion. It simply empowers the Forestry Division to rearrange the lands of these several forest reserves for a more economical and easy management. Very often a forest reserve occupies two sides of a mountain, an almost impassable mountain, capped with snow, perhaps, nine months in the year. During all that time, in order to manage that reservation and to police it and look after it, they have got to go clear around the mountain, many miles, not being able to cross over it. This simply gives him the power to add a portion of a forest reservation that is on one side of the mountain to another forest reservation that is contiguous to it, and so on the other side the land that is contiguous to that. It is simply for a more economical management of this forest reserve, and I do hope that the gentleman from Minnesota will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman say that this does not increase the power of the Secretary of Agriculture in the matter of making selections of land for forest purposes?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Absolutely not. Its purpose is simply economy of administration.

Mr. TAWNEY. If that is its purpose, I withdraw the point

Mr. MONDELL. I renew the point of order, Mr. Chairman. I wish to ask the gentleman why this legislation is necessary? It is a fact that the boundaries of the forest reserves and the names of forest reserves are continually being changed now, and have always been under the law. All the forest reserves are being consolidated, divided, division lines changed, their names constantly, and at all times—and I want to call the attention of the gentleman—

Mr. MANN. They want to change the name to the Mondell Forest Reserve. That is the reason they want this authority. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. I want to call the gentleman's attention the fact that this language authorizes the Secretary to divide all lands in national forests not in national forest reserves

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me correct the gentleman right here. "National forest" is the title now adopted for forest reserves instead of using the words "forest reserves."

Mr. MANN. Who has adopted it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is adopted in this bill.

Mr. MANN. But this bill is not law. By what authority is it done?

Mr. MONDELL. Where does the gentleman find any authority of law for referring to national forest reserves as "national forests?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The law of the appropriation bill of Mr. MONDELL. Does not that bill use the term "national forest reserves" at all?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will not say positively about the "at all," but the general name applied to the forest reserves is

Mr. MONDELL. I shall insist upon my point of order, first, because the language is very ambiguous, and, second, because there is authority given to change the boundaries of forest reserves, carrying with it authority to change the names of forest reserves, to divide, subdivide, and consolidate. Authority to do all these things is carried in the law authorizing the establishment of forest reserves.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me say right there that the Forester does not so understand it, because he asked very earnestly for this proviso.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to the gentleman that the Forester has, to my personal knowledge, divided a forest reserve in my State into three divisions and changed the names of those divisions, and that it is a fact that the boundaries of the divisions of forest reserves are constantly being changed as a matter of administration. There can be no doubt as to the authority of the Secretary to change a name which he has given to a reserve, or to divide a given reserve into two reserves for administrative purposes, or to change the boundaries of existing reserves so that the boundary line shall run on the summit of a mountain range, as the gentleman suggests, instead of running through a valley, so that it is difficult to administer; and in view of the fact that the authority which the chairman desires is now exercised by the Department and that the language herein contained is ambiguous, I insist on the point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, if the Forester already has that power, I certainly have no objection to this going out. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.
Mr. SCOTT. In view of the ruling of the Chair, I would suggest that the gentleman from Minnesota ought also to strike out the words "and hereafter," in line 4, to make the language con-

Mr. MANN. That has gone out already. He amended it.

I include the word "hereafter."

Mr. TAWNEY. I include the Mr. MANN. "And hereafter." Mr. TAWNEY. No; the word

Mr. MANN. "And hereafter."

Mr. TAWNEY. No; the word "hereafter," in line 4.

The CHAIRMAN. 'The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think the word "and," on page 39, after "forests," was stricken out, so that the word "and," in line 4, page 40, ought not to go out, but simply the word "hereafter."

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The meetion now is more the second point of order relead by the question now is upon the second point of order, raised by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. TAWNEY. I insist on the second point of order. This makes an indefinite permanent appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Worse than that.

Mr. TAWNEY. I believe that all permanent appropriations should be repealed, where they can without injury to the public service; but certainly an indefinite permanent appropriation is far more out of keeping with good administration and good policy than even a definite permanent appropriation.

Mr. MANN. This would permit him to borrow money and spend it wherever he pleased.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand the authority under this is very wide, and I do not think the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture ought to insist upon increasing the appropriation indefinitely which is granted by Congress to the Forestry Bureau, by allowing the Forester to deposit the money received for the sale of timber and for other purposes in the Treasury to the credit of his appropriation, thus indefinitely increasing the appropriation, so that Congress will never know what this Forestry Service is costing.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Does the gentleman from Minnesota understand that this provision applies to the sale of timber on forest reserves?

Mr. TAWNEY. It applies to just what it says. All moneys received as contributions toward cooperative work in forest investigation and in the protection and improvement of the national forests shall be covered into the Treasury and shall constitute a special fund which is hereby appropriated and made available until expended, as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, for the payment of the expenses of such investigation, protection, improvement, etc.

I may not have been technically correct in saying that the proceeds of the sale of timber went into this fund, because I understand they now have a permanent appropriation which is made up of these sales of timber.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is under a misapprehension. This does not refer to any sales of proceeds of forestry, such as timber, but in various places insect pests and other influences injurious to the forests have appeared and have wrought great injury. In some instances which have come under my own personal notice in-dividuals have contributed to assist the forest rangers in stamping out, for instance, an insect pest or in extinguishing forest fires or in preventing some other depredations. These moneys received in this way are simply covered over into a special fund, to be handled by the Forester as a part of a special appropriation, so that they will not eventually get back into the general funds in the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. The existing law carried in the last appropria-tion act has the word "hereafter" in it, so that it is permanent law, and it provides for everything that the gentleman

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. I believe so, if the word "hereafter" was in the law of last year ter" was in the law of last year. Mr. MANN. The word "hereafter" is in it.

Mr. TAWNEY. The statement of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Brooks] simply gives another reason why this should not be retained, because the conduct of the Department under this provision, as he has described it, is clearly in violation of law to-day. No individual forester has a right to receive compensation from any individual or any State or any combination of individuals. The officials of the Government of the United States are allowed to receive only such money as is appropriated to compensate them for their services.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr.

TAWNEY] is mistaken.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; he is not.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the current appropriation contains this item:

And hereafter all moneys received as contributions toward cooperative work in forest investigations shall be covered into the Treasury and shall constitute a special fund, which is hereby appropriated and made available until expended, as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, for the payment of the expenses of such investigations by the Forest Service and for refunds to the contributors of amounts heretofore or hereafter paid by them in excess of their share of the cost of such investigations.

Now, that is permanent law. It does not require legislation to include that at all. That covers all the case which the gentleman from Colorado has referred to, but this provision authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture or the Chief of Forestry practically to borrow money to make permanent improvements in the forests. I don't know whether it was so intended by the committee, but that is the effect. The new provision in the bill says the money may be used not for cooperative work in forest investigations merely, but also in the protection and improvement of the national forests, and again the words "protection and improvement" appear.

Mr. TAWNEY. The words "and improvements" are new.

Mr. MANN. The words "protection and improvement" new and are subject to the point of order, and not only subject to the point of order in that respect, but would authorize them to accept contributions which they should pay back at their pleasure, which practically is an authority to borrow money to make permanent improvements.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I think that is a little overstated, but I yield the point of order on those words, "and in the protection and improvement of the natural forests.

Mr. MANN. The whole clause is subject to the point of order, and does not affect the authority which they now have under the existing law, which is permanent. The existing law has the word "hereafter" in it, and is permanent law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is all right; I understand that. I can see that the words "and improvement" are subject to the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Under the ruling of the Chair the entire paragraph, or that portion to which I made the point of order, would go out.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a correct statement. The Chair sustains the point of order to the words included in the paragraph referred to by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MANN. So that there may be no error, will the Chair have the Clerk read the words which go out?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report, unless objection is made, the words which go out under this point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 40, beginning line 15:

"and hereafter all moneys received as contributions toward cooperative work in forest investigations and in the protection and improvement of the national forests shall be covered into the Treasury and shall constitute a special fund, which is hereby appropriated and made available until expended as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, for the payment of the expenses of said investigation, protection, and improvement by the Forest Service, and for refunds to the contributors of amounts herefore or hereafter paid in by them in excess of their share of the cost of said investigations, protection, and improvement."

Mr. WADSWORTH. That leaves the law exactly as it was

Mr. TAWNEY. I suggest it ought to go farther and include the words "to transport and care for fish and game supplied to stock the national forests or the waters therein.

Mr, MANN. Will the gentleman from Minnesota permit me to suggest that he might well not make the point of order on the transportation of fish?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is not new.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes: it is new.

Mr. MANN. It is only desired to permit the Bureau of Fisheries to furnish fish to the Forester to put in the national reserve, and there ought to be no objection to that.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not object to a proposition of that kind, but I supposed it was part of the existing law

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is not.
Mr. TAWNEY. If it is not, I withdraw the point of order. Mr. MANN. Make the point of order end with the word improvement." in line 25.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless there is objection, it will be so un-erstood. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection. Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question in regard to how he understands the money now received for sales of timber is disposed of?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is turned into the Treasury and used for continuing the work of the forest reserves, forms part of the available sum for that use by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. LACEY. It is a permanent indefinite appropriation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. LACEY. So that that sum can be used without regard to what it is used for so it is used within the law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. For the maintenance, improvement, and protection of the forest reserves.

Mr. LACEY. What was the amount of this indefinite appropriation last year?

Mr. MANN. It was not a permanent indefinite appropriation; it is only from year to year.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman from New York states it is permanent. Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman from Minnesota suggested the striking out of the word "hereafter" in that item. Mr. MANN.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The receipts from timber sales in 1906 were $252,527.09.

Mr. LACEY. How long does this permanent appropriation run?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It runs right along.

Mr. MANN. Authority is only conferred from year to year to

Mr. LACEY. I would ask the gentleman if he does not think it would be well to encourage the cutting of this timber so as to reduce the price of lumber, to throw more of this timber on the market?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I certainly do. I believe in treating our forest reserves as other governments treat theirs, but I was not going to take up this matter yet. I did not think we had reached it, but here is a table-

Mr. LACEY. I want to hear from the gentleman when he thinks he has reached the proper point.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the next point of order I made is on page 41, line 2, beginning after the word "therein," "to employ fiscal and other agents, clerks, assistants, etc., for that service in Washington." The point of order is made on the ground it changes existing law. It is, in fact, a violation of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Minnesota call the Chair's attention to the particular law?

Mr. TAWNEY. The act of 1882 expressly prohibits the employment of any personal service in the city of Washington to be paid out of a lump-sum appropriation, and expressly requires that these Departments shall specifically estimate for the number of clerks and other employees required in their respective Departments.

That is the existing law, and has been since 1882. that time there was general authority for the employment of personal services or for compensating for personal services here in the city of Washington out of lump-sum appropriations. And the practice existed to such an extent and has been abused to such an extent that Congress passed a law expressly providing that hereafter there should be no employment and no compensation paid out of lump-sum appropriations for personal services here in the city of Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr.

AWNEY] the law on that?

Mr. TAWNEY. I had it in my committee room only day be-fore yesterday. I have not got it here, but the same question arose on an estimate from one of the Departments where the estimates for the services for one of the bureaus called for a lump-sum appropriation, and the attention of the officer was called to this law. I cited the law, and he was informed unless he submitted a detailed estimate the Committee on Appropriations could not consider his estimate at all.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota and to the Chair that a similar provision went out the other day on the paragraph relating to the grain laboratory.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is the act of 1882, which reads as follows:

Mr. TAWNET. It is the act of 1882, which reads as follows:
No civil officer, clerk, draftsman, copylst, messenger, assistant messenger, mechanic, watchman, laborer, or other employee authorized after October, 1892, to be employed in any of the Executive Departments or subordinate bureaus or offices thereof at the seat of government, except only at such rates and in such numbers, respectively, as may be specifically appropriated for by Congress; and for such clerical and other personal services for each fiscal year no civil officer, clerk, draftsman, copyist, messenger, assistant messenger, watchman, mechanic, laborer, or other employee shall hereafter be employed at the seat of government in an Executive Department or subordinate bureaus or offices thereof, or to be paid from any appropriation made for contingent expenses or for any specific or general purpose, unless such employment is authorized and payment therefor specifically provided in the law making the appropriation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That law seems to cover that paragraph, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But the item is similar to a provision that was in last year's bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. My point of order goes to the language from the semicolon after the word "therein," in line 2, down to and including the semicolon in line 5, after the word "elsewhere."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. He does not wish to preclude the payment of fiscal or other agents, but he wants to preclude their employment in the city of Washington. Therefore I suggest that he amend his amendment and strike out " in the city of Washington."

Mr. MANN. This does not say "employment in the city of Washington." This says "conducting experiments and investigations in the city of Washington."

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes. Mr. MANN. It does not provide for the employment of agents, clerks, or other labor required in practical forestry.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know how you can perform a service of any kind without employing personal service.

Mr. MANN. I say the agents and clerks provided here in practical forestry are not referred-

Mr. TAWNEY. This proviso authorizes the employment of these men in the city of Washington and elsewhere. My point of order goes to the authority of clerks here in the city of Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of Mr. WADSWORTH. For the information of the committee will the clerk read that paragraph just as it will read?

Mr. TAWNEY. He is authorized to employ his men for the making of these investigations outside of the city of Washington, in another part of this bill. Therefore the language be-tween these two semicolons should go out, because that relates only to the employment of these men here in the city of Washington, except in so far as the words "and elsewhere" add to his authority to employ—they can not add to it—from appropriations made in another part of the bill for outside investiga-This is all provided for in another part of the bill. tions.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In no other part of the bill are those words used to employ fiscal and other agents, clerks, and other laborers required in forestry. The language is to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and to make a continual investigation. If that language is broad enough to suit the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawney] I have no objection to it. Mr. TAWNEY. I want to put a stop to this employment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is a little technical, but I am not disposed to waste much time on it. I hope the gentleman from Minnesota will modify his motion.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think, perhaps, Mr. Chairman, that the objection made by the gentleman from New York, in charge of the bill, can be met by striking out or making my point of order applicable to the words, after "forests," in line 4, "and in conducting experiments and investigations in the city of Washington and elsewhere;" so as to read: "To employ fiscal and other agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in practical forestry, in the administration of national forests."

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is perfectly satisfactory, Mr.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, and that is the sense of the committee

Mr. SMITH of California. If the gentleman from Minnesota does not object to them conducting experiments outside of Washington, why does he strike out the word "elsewhere?"

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from California is right that the word "elsewhere" is necessary, then the words "elsewhere than in the city of Washington" ought to be added to it.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. The general language of page 38 covers that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] Chair hears none. The Chair sustains the point of order. Clerk will now read, in order that no mistake may be made, the paragraph as it will stand.

Mr. MANN. The full paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN.

The Clerk read as follows:

To employ fiscal and other agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in practical forestry in the administration of national forests.

Mr. WADSWORTH. All right.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I made the point of order upon that part of the paragraph authorizing the procurement of an official seal. I am perfectly willing to reserve the point of order if the gentleman from New York wants to make a

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Forester wanted it because the seal is needed where there is any lawsuit. However, if the gentleman insists, the seal of the Department will answer just

The CHAIRMAN. Before going to that language, referred to by the gentleman from Illinois, the Chair thinks the point of order raised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], which is pending, should be disposed of.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I made the point of order against the language commencing on line 15: "And periodicals for circulating library for officers of the Forest Service stationed outside of Washington." That is found in lines 15 and 16.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, it has been thought wise by the Forester to establish at these isolated cabins where the range riders live small libraries, technical, relating almost entirely to forestry. They can not draw from the libraries here, and I think it is wise provision to let them have access to books touching upon forestry and, in a limited way, to other literature.

Mr. FITZGERALD. By leaving in the words "technical books" the Department can purchase whatever books of that character are required. In the investigations that have been made during the past three or four years it has been found that wherever a Department or bureau has power to purchase periodicals great abuse has grown up. I object to "periodicals."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I agree with the gentleman; and we have remedied that in the Department almost entirely, I may say entirely. There was a disposition in every bureau chief to start a library of his own. Now we have stricken out from every bureau the right to buy books, and they must ask them from the central libraries. We might require them to draw them out and give a receipt for them, just as we give a receipt for them. That is why we use the word "circulating library." It is not proposed to establish a library at every little post; but the idea is at one post, at one central management post on the range or reservation, just exactly as the bureau chiefs draw from the central library here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Can not that be done without that special language?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not think it can be done. I do not see how they can buy books without you give them the power to buy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The only language I object to is, "and periodicals for circulating libraries." Now, there is authority for the purchase of "technical books," and I assume the Department can distribute those books.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not think the gentleman would be so hard hearted as to refuse the purchase of a few books for the use of these people out on these lonely ranges

Mr. MANN. Do you want them to get Scribner's Magazine? Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will permit, I felt that way at one time, but last year it was found that statements were made that about $150 was spent under a similar provision by one particular Bureau of the Government, and when the detailed statement was furnished it was found that $4,000 had been expended. I am not willing to give this power to any official of this Government, because my experience has been that he will undoubtedly abuse the power.

Mr. MANN. Why does not the gentleman from New York agree to strike out the word "periodicals?"

Mr. FITZGERALD. And "circulating libraries," too.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can only say with reference to Mr. Pinchot that the experience of the committee is that he has never abused his power.

Mr. MANN. There is grave danger that Mr. Pinchot will not continue forever to occupy this position.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the common reports be true as to his popularity in certain places, it is very doubtful if Mr. Pinchot will remain long in this particular position.

Mr. LEVER. I would suggest the chairman of the committee consent to strike out the word "periodicals."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am inclined to believe that if the Department has the right to purchase "technical books," it can purchase the books that may be required for the service and send them wherever they are required.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me for a moment? I suppose the purpose of this is to establish circulating libraries in the same manner as they are now carried on in the lighthouse service. I will say to the gentleman from New York that in my judgment the little libraries that move around from one place to another, in the lighthouse service, save the sanity of a good many men who are employed in that service, where it is not possible for them to reach other human beings for a considerable portion of the year. They have that method of exchanging a few books from one place to another, and while I agree that we ought not to buy periodicals, and I should think the gentleman might well strike out periodicals, I do not object to their having technical works on forestry.

Mr. LAMB. That is what is intended.

Mr. MANN. So that the men who are working in the Forestry Service shall have an opportunity, during the time when they can not find anything else to do, and can see nobody else, of reading these technical works on forestry and benefiting the Government thereby.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The conditions in the light-house service and the Forestry Service are not at all similar. A man in the light-house service is confined in a light-house isolated from everything. He has nothing to do and nothing to see. He must necessarily read. A man in the Forestry Service, during the daytime at any rate, will be engaged outdoors on many different things. Now, if the Department can purchase "technical books" and can send those books wherever its employees require them, it does not need to establish circulating libraries for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. I am not sure that the Department would have authority, without an act of Congress, to purchase books in Washington for the use of the Department here and then send them out to Wyoming.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Treasury Department, without any particular authority to establish circulating libraries, sends out certain books that are required by its employees—the customs regulations, for instance, and other publications. I believe this Department can do the same thing.

Mr. WADSWORTH. One word more, Mr. Chairman,

Mr. COCKS. Mr. Chairman, who has the floor? Mr. LAMB. I ought to have it.

Mr. COCKS. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York if he does not think that a man who is in an isolated cabin in a forest reserve is very similarly situated to a man in a lighthouse, especially in the long winter nights? And what objection can there be to having little circulating libraries that are passed on from one cabin to another? It seems to me the condition is almost identical with that of the men in the light-house service. They are both isolated from human society. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, Mr. Chairman, there is no similarity at all between the conditions of the forestry service and the light-house service. I happen to have been situated both ways, and I know.

Mr. COCKS. So do I.

Mr. LAMB. I knew the committee had interrogated Mr. Pinchot on this matter, and here is what Mr. Pinchot says:

We have a lot of men in the reserves who are anxious to learn, but they can not afford to buy expensive books on forestry themselves. We have them in the library here, but we have not enough of them. There-fore we wanted to make a little circulating library on various topics, to go from reserve to reserve, or from man to man in the reserve, so that the men could study.

That is what Mr. Pinchot said on the subject.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, just one word more. Mr. Pinchot estimates that these libraries would cost from $25 to $40. Maybe that will soften the hard heart of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the way they start, but the finish is always very different. The Department under the language left in the bill will have the power to purchase all the "technical books" it requires and to send those books anywhere it pleases.

That is all the power it should have.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist upon his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do.
Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield it.
The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

question now recurs to the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman from New York able to make any differentiation between this and the other?
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth] care to be heard on this point of order?

Mr. WADSWORTH. On what has the gentleman raised the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I reserved the point of order on the official seal.
Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, I yield that.
The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total for salaries and general expenses, Forest Service, $900,000. Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of line 13, page 42, the following:

"That marketable and ripened timber shall be sold for reasonable prices by the Secretary of Agriculture, such sales to be made only to persons not connected with any trust or combination entered into to control the product or prices of timber, and the Secretary may sell such timber from time to time at such prices as will tend to cheapen lumber in the open market to consumers."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. Mr. MANN.

Mr. LACEY. Oh, I trust the gentleman will withhold his point of order until the matter can be explained.

Mr. MANN. Mr. LACEY. Very well, I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on this quesfrom the Lacer. Mr. Charman, I want to be heard on this question briefly. I have always had a good deal of interest in the forest reserves. About the first work I ever did in the Congress of the United States was, in 1891, to help draw the bill creating these forest reserves. The law has been in force now not very many years, but we have accumulated in the reserves over 100,000,000 acres of the best remaining timber on the continent, an area equal to Iowa and Missouri combined. mediate effect of this vast withdrawal of timber from the market has been to very greatly aid the lumber trust, the men who are engaged in combination to keep up the prices. There has been withdrawn and set apart now, I think, about 116,000,000 acres of land. Practically all the remaining timber upon the public land is now owned by the Government, so that the men who are controlling timber under private ownership feel perfectly secure that this vast amount has been withdrawn from competition with them, and that has been one of the great elements that have aided them in the tremendous advance of prices within the last few years.

The forest reserves are now being administered upon the theory that they should make as much money as they can out of the timber; that when the timber is sold it should be sold at good stiff prices. This timber belongs to the United States, to the nation. Its immediate withdrawal in such enormous quantity from the markets of the country has aided greatly in enhancing the price and causing the present extravagant prices that lumber now brings in the open market. If under this provision the Secretary of Agriculture should not put this timber on the market at as good a price as he can get, but instead should bear the market with it, should sell it at a reasonable price, and sell it to nobody connected with any combinations or trusts now controlling the market, the effect of thus using 116,000,000 acres of the best of our forest lands in the interest of the consumer instead of in the interest of the men who control the lumber business would be a tremendous factor upon the price of lumber.

Mr. DRISCOLL. If he should sell it for less than the market price, who would fix the price?

Mr. LACEY. Let him sell it at a lower price than the enforced market price. That is the purpose of this amendment, authorizing him to put the price down when he thinks it is extravagant, and thus, instead of combining with the lumber trust to raise the price of lumber, use this enormous area of timber for the benefit of the consumer.

Mr. DRISCOLL. If he sells it for less than the market price, how will be distribute it evenly?

Mr. LACEY. The proposition is to allow him to sell it for less. The market price to-day is not only the market price; it is an artificial price fixed by combination, instead of being the price fixed by the market.

Mr. DRISCOLL. But it still is the market price, is it not?

Mr. DRISCOLL. But it still is the market price, is it not?
Mr. LACEY. When one man makes the market price that is the market price, and when a combination makes the market price that is the market price also; but if the Secretary of Agriculture says, "Gentlemen, you are selling lumber at $30 or $40 a thousand that ought to be sold for much less, and I am going to sell it for much less," then they will have to come down to his price. In other words, put the Secretary of Agriculture on the other side of the market instead of upon the bull side, and the people of the country are interested in the bear side of lumber at the present time more than ever before in the history of the United States.

Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the Mr. LACEY. Certainly. Mr. TAWNEY. I agree I agree with the gentleman as to the effect of withdrawing all the forests of the United States from the market upon price of lumber, and that it results in increasing the price of lumber, but does the gentleman know-I suppose he does that the Secretary of Agriculture, in the administration of the forest reserve, does not deal in lumber at all, but in stumpage? If his amendment is held in order I shall cheerfully vote for it in the hope of reducing the price of lumber.

Mr. LACEY. Certainly,
Mr. TAWNEY. Now, I am informed by the Forestry Bureau that the Government price of stumpage is to-day far below the market price of stumpage sold by individual owners to the great lumber concerns of this country. I want to call his attention to another fact and a change that should be made in his amendment, that he should also include the words "or any member thereof," in reference to the trusts, because these combinations, I have no doubt, are made up of a great many different lumber concerns, and none of them should be allowed to compete for

Mr. LACEY. I think the proposed amendment is broad enough now.

Mr. TAWNEY. The independent members of these corporations or trusts might be able to go in and buy stumpage just the same, and you would not accomplish the purpose which you intend.

Mr. LACEY. I think the amendment is broad enough as it is, but if not, I should be glad enough to have it amended so as to secure the results desired; but what I want the House and what I want the country to understand is to know that, while we have been moved by a wise and beneficent purpose, the immediate effect of this tremendous withdrawal has been to play directly into the hands of the lumber trust.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman be willing to add an amendment, "Provided, That the Government should not lease any land for cattle or sheep grazing unless the parties should agree to sell them at a much reduced price from the present outrageous and exorbitant price which the farmers are now getting?"

Mr. LACEY. That is another matter, and my friend might prepare an amendment in regard to that. I would not lease any forest reserve for grazing to these persons connected with the beef trust either; but that is a different proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I would ask for a few minutes

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed-for how long?

Mr. LACEY. Oh, for about three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MACON. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Certainly. Mr. LACEY.

Mr. MACON. Does the gentleman think the lumber trust any worse than many of the other trusts of this country?

Mr. LACEY. Oh, no, not at all; but the gentleman, if he has followed my remarks closely, will see the point I am trying to make is this, that under the existing law we have unintentionally been playing into the hands of the lumber trust by the withdrawal of great areas of land heavily covered with timber from the lumber markets. Now, that can be prevented by making the price of the stumpage, and there is a present law authorizing the sale of that stumpage, low rather than high, and making it so as to keep the price of lumber within reasonable bounds, rather than in order to secure as much as possible revenue from the forests of the country.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman—
Mr. MACON. Now, will the gentleman yield—
Mr. LACEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGEBALD]

FITZGERALD. How will the Department determine when the prices are unreasonable in the open market?

Mr. LACEY. There is no question about them being extravagant now, none whatever.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The purchaser would always feel that way.

Mr. LACEY. Certainly the purchaser, when he is confronted with the double, treble, quadruple price in a short time, and when he ascertains that the Government inadvertently has been aiding in that increase in price, he would naturally look to the Government to help him instead of encouraging the extravagant price he is compelled to pay.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, would not this same thing be accomplished by taking the tariff off lumber and letting it come in free from Canada?

Mr. LACEY. The trouble is in Canada they do not have much timber, and the price of lumber is as high, higher, to-day in Canada than in the United States. The advance in lumber is very many times the amount of the duty, which is $2 a thousand feet.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They want it in my State pretty badly. Mr. LACEY. Very well. We might agree on that when the proper time comes, but here is the proposition we are confronted with now, and I desire not to be drawn into a tariff dis-cussion. We know when we made lumber imported from Canada free that they immediately put an export duty of the same amount that we took off, and the result was we paid the same duty, $2, but paid it into the treasury at Ottawa instead of at Washington. I do not care to discuss that now. We are on the agricultural bill now. I have presented a direct proposition on the present bill. The Congress of the United States is in position to go on the bear side of the lumber market with its enormous area of splendid timber lands, and I think it is time to move in that direction, and I trust that the gentleman will withhold his point of order and let the House vote on this amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. I wish to very heartily indorse all that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] has said in regard to the effect of the Government's policy in connection with the forest reserves. In the intermountain States we have witnessed the rather remarkable spectacle of the establishment by the Government of the United States of a complete monopoly in lumber, and then of the Government's taking advantage of the monopoly thus created to raise the price of lumber as high or higher than the prices charged by the alleged lumber combines of the Pacific coast.

When the forest reserves were first established a nominal price was placed upon stumpage, not exactly a nominal price, but a fair price, averaging in the intermountain country a dollar a thousand for live timber. Gradually that price has increased until now the Government is selling lumber or timber at one point in my State-jack pine, spruce, inferior timber-at $5 per thousand stumpage. The result of that has been in connection with the demands made by the Forest Service upon the operator to clean up all lops, tops, and chips made in his operation, to increase the price of lumber in that locality about $7 a thousand and to increase it about $7 above the price in other localities with similar timber supply where, fortunately, the Government has not established a monopoly.

In the Yellowstone Forest Reserve in my State, twice as large as the State of Massachusetts, is included practically all of the forest in a region of 50,000 square miles. The Government, as the owner and possessor of that forest, has a monopoly and has advanced the price with each successive sale of lumber until one by one the small mill owners, by reason of the advancing price and the ever-increasing requirement as to clearing up the tops and burning them, have been forced out of the business of lumbering, and we have one company purchasing millions of feet of the Government timber, monopolizing the sale of lumber in that locality and compelled to charge from $5 to $7 a thousand more than the small mills charged a few years ago.

But some of our friends say this price is not exorbitant. If it were the Government could not obtain it. The Government obtains this price because it has a monopoly. On the other side of the Big Horn Basin, where a governmental monopoly has not been established, where private owners have purchased timber lands under the timber and stone act and acquired timber lands in other ways, the little mills still sell lumber at about $12 to $14 a thousand at the mills; while about the Yellowstone Forest Reserve, under Government sales, the price is from $18 to $22. In other words, the private mill owner, cutting his own lumber, is selling it at a profit of about a dollar a thousand stumpage, while this great and glorious Government, for the purpose of swelling the surplus in the Treasury and relieving you folks down east from taxation, charges my constituents from $5 to $7 a thousand for lumber more than they would have been compelled to pay had not this Government monopoly been established.

The Pacific coast has this advantage, that it has millions of acres of fine forest lands and no combination there can raise the price above what we would consider a very reasonable price. Everything we produce in the intermountain country we must ship to far-distant markets. Everything we use must be trans-ported a great distance and at high freight rates. If our lo-cality gives us any advantage at all to offset these disadvantages it is in the scrubby forest on our mountain slopes. Along comes the Government in the pursuit of a beneficent purpose, establishes a monopoly, and proceeds to charge a price for forest products that the most soulless private monopoly on the face of the earth would blush to charge. As the price of lumber has raised on the coast and the freight rates to our markets have increased, the Government has put on the thumbscrews, and every time a new contract is to be let the price of stumpage is higher, higher, and the Government becomes the strongest and best ally of the lumber barons. Why, there are reserves in my State where the Government could just as well get $10 a thousand stumpage as $5, for these reserves constitute the only source of supply, and the settler must have the lumber; and we anticipate that within another year, if the same policy is pursued that has been in the past, that we will not be paying $5 per thousand into the National Treasury on every thousand feet of lumber that we use, but ten and twelve; for there is no limit to the price this Government monopoly may compel settlers to pay for those things they must have in regions where the Government owns all the forests.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it certainly was never intended that in the establishment of forest reserves for the protection of the forests from destruction, for the conservation of the water supply, that the Government should use those forest reserves for the purpose of establishing a lumber monopoly, and in the establishment of it to aid, to abet, to encourage, to help and fortify the lumber trust, if there be one. Forest reserves were not established for the purpose of making money for the Government. They were established for the purpose of conserving these forests for the purpose of conserving the water supply, for the purpose of retaining a condition in those regions which would bring about reforestation. The Government could do all this and have sufficient revenue ultimately for the care of the forests and still charge a fair and reasonable price for forest products. Instead of that each inspector who visits our reservation "boosts" the price a little higher, until we have had a monopoly established by the side of which the alleged lumber monopoly on the Pacific coast is a mild-mannered and philanthropic organization.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon my point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes on this general subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment be ruled in order, I shall ask the committee to consider an amendment to it which I have prepared. It is to add to the proposed provision of the gentleman from Iowa this:

And whenever the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine that the market price of lumber is unreasonable and shall offer lumber for sale under this provision for less than the market price, lumber shall be admitted to the United States free of duty during the period that such sales shall be so made by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. MANN. It has not been reported yet.
Mr. FITZGERALD. I would not expect my colleague to reserve a point of order against that provision, because the residents of his own particular section of my State are suffering from inability to get their lumber at reasonable prices by reason of the tariff. If this lumber trust, as has been pointed out recently in a very able speech in another place, is extorting unreasonable sums from the people, not only should the Government use the lumber in these great forest reserves to prevent extortionate prices being charged, but it should open to the people of this country the lumber from all over the world so as to break down and destroy this cruel and unjust trust.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. I will ask the gentleman if he does not think it hardly proper to inject a political question into this question, where a legitimate and proper relief can be had in the legislation now before the committee?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it is not injecting a political question into this matter. The gentleman from Iowa has suggested an amendment to this bill. If the conditions be as he describes, if relief be so imperatively required, then I suggest that, disregarding whatever politics there may be, we meet on the common ground of a desire to benefit the people of the entire country and to relieve them from the exactions of an unholy and cruel trust. I know gentlemen on that side of the House will not invoke the technical rule to prevent the people from having relief from the operation of this monopoly, which has been condemned by everybody familiar with the facts.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is new legislation, and not germane. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. LACEY. I concede that the point of order is good, but I trust that the gentleman in charge of the bill, recognizing that it is in the interest of agriculture, will not insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. OLMSTED). It seems to be clear that the proposed amendment seeks to confer upon the Secretary of Agriculture power that he does not now possess; that it changes existing law and is legislation on an appropriation bill, in violation of the rule. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

And there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000, to be immediately available and until expended, as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, to construct permanent improvements for the proper and ecanomical administration, protection, and development of the national forests.

I make the point of order on the paragraph. Mr. MANN. Mr. TAWNEY. I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I wish to make a point of order against the paragraph from line 14 to line 20. I will reserve the point of order if the gentleman desires.

Mr. SMITH of California. I hope the gentleman will reserve it for a moment.

Mr. MANN. First, it provides that the money shall be appropriated until expended; second, I desire to reserve a point of order against the part providing that he may construct and establish permanent improvements. So far as I am concerned, if those were stricken out of the paragraph I should have no objection to it. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I stated a few moments ago that the Government had taken over these forest reserves. We are taking care of them, we are policing them, we are preventing trespass on them, and we have now reached the point that has been reached by all the foreign governments that have gone into forestry—a point where we can develop these forests, where we can cut the surplus timber every year and make them finally self-sustaining. That is all there is of it, and this is simply to furnish the Forester with a working capital, exactly as men need a working capital in any business, to be used in building roads, opening up trails, and all that kind of work.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from New York permit question for information?

Mr. WADSWORTH. As to making the appropriation available until it is expended, he might use all of it this year or he

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York if he can give the committee any information as to the relative size of the forests of European governments and the size of our present forest reserves in the United States?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not give exact comparisons, but the forest reserves of the United States are equal to all New England, New York, and, I think, part of Pennsylvania in area—127,000,000 acres of land. They constitute a domain.

Mr. TAWNEY. You were making a comparison a moment ago with regard to foreign countries and the administration of their forest reserves. I want to ask the gentleman if he can give us any idea of the size of the forest reserves of foreign countries, to which he referred a moment ago?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have not the figures to make a comparison between the size of the forest reserves in Europe and the size of our forest reserves, but I will state that the forest reserves of the European countries which have them are more than self-sustaining. They all yield handsome revenues to the government, and I have before me here a statement by the Forester, showing his estimates of receipts and disbursements for the next ten years, which shows that in 1917 the estimated receipts will be $6,000,000 and the estimated expenditures $4,-900,000, leaving a net surplus of something over a million dollars to be turned into the Treasury of the United States. That arises entirely from the sale of the surplus or what you might call "matured" timber and from grazing on the forest reserves. For instance, he estimates that in 1917 the sales of timber will amount to $4,500,000 and that the receipts from grazing will be $1,500,000, making a total of $6,000,000. Now I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman inform us whether this amount of money which he has referred to as the estimated receipts in 1917 or any other time—the $6,000,000—is authorized to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture without any affirmative action on the part of Congress?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is.

Mr. MANN. So that if this appropriation goes into effect, giving the Secretary of Agriculture the working appropriation which the gentleman refers to, it will be wholly beyond Congress, and the Forester will absolutely take control of the

Mr. WADSWORTH. The forests and the receipts.

Mr. MANN. And he will run the whole thing on a business basis, according to his plan, without coming to Congress for an appropriation, without asking Congress to decide whether certain improvements should be made or whether certain officials should be employed, but leaving it wholly to him to expend all of the money coming in, the receipts from the sale of forest timber, as he may be pleased.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no doubt about it, if this thing is done the Government goes into the business. They propose to sell timber and to rent pasture. There is no doubt about that. But what else are you going to do with that forest? Other governments have done it and make handsome incomes out of it. It is simply a question for this House to decide whether they want that done or whether they want this vast territory held in idleness. The foresters are required to make annual reports of expenditures to the Congress, and Congress, at any time, can take this up and put upon it any curb they may deem wise

Mr. MONDELL. I want to suggest that the President in his special message to Congress suggested a loan of $5,000,000 for the purposes for which this $500,000 is to be used. In other words, to build rangers' cabins, to build roads, to make trails, to put up telephone lines, and to do those things that are necessary for the proper control of the reserve and for the best utilization of the reserves and their products, to protect them from fires, and to provide for the disposition of their products. They need a sum in addition to the regular appropriation, which is used for administrative purposes, for the pay of rangers and like purposes, an additional sum for the purpose of erecting these comparatively inexpensive but necessary permanent ways and structures

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended. Is there

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. As I was saying, an additional sum is needed for the purpose of erecting these small, comparatively inexpensive, but permanent structures for the protection of the rangers in the discharge of their duties and to enable them to patrol the reserves. Personally I did not think that the Forestry Service could use economically as large a sum as was suggested in the President's message. I believe they can use properly and that they will use economically within the year the sum herein provided.

Mr. MANN. Assuming that that be true, is that any reason why the Forestry Service can not estimate to Congress what they want and the amount they want as well as the Army and Navy does, as well as every other branch of the Government does?

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman's objection relate to the fact that there is no limitation on the period within which this can be expended?

Mr. MANN. That provides for permanent improvements in a general way without any limitations.

Mr. MONDELL. If there be no special objection to limiting

Mr. WADSWORTH. None at all.

Mr. MONDELL. Then limit it to twelve months.

Mr. MANN. Here is the point: Under this bill the Forester-I don't know that he would-could commence a thousand-different permanent improvements, and every one of those improve-ments would be a work in progress for which an appropriation could be made, and we all know that these appropriations when started are easily obtained and made. Now, I think that we ought to know what the improvements are, and that there ought to be a limitation. I have no objection to giving the Forestry Service $500,000 to complete improvements within the year, but not to commence them without any limitation.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that it would be impossible to complete at once many of the improvements to be made. For instance, a trail through the forest reserve may run for 20 miles across a mountain range. It may not be entirely completed this year, and yet it is made good enough so that a pack animal may pass along it.

Mr. MANN. The trail can be completed as far as it goes. Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Wyoming permit an interruption? Speaking of trails, there are other Departments of the Government that are authorized to make trails, that come to Congress and secure appropriations, but they come with specific estimates as to what the cost of that trail will be. There are other Departments that come to Congress that have authority under the law to put roads in the national parks and in Government reserves. They come to Congress with specific estimates of what it will cost, and they get the appropriation for it. In what respect does the Forestry Service differ from the service in any other Department that would exempt them or would justify Congress in exempting that Department from coming here with a specific estimate for appropriations to make these improvements which they say are necessary in these forest reserves?

Mr. MONDELL. Why, Mr. Chairman, this is a specific estimate.

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no; it is not. It is a lump-sum appropriation, to be expended in their discretion. It may be all expended on one improvement.

Mr. MONDELL. Certain classes of improvement.

Mr. MANN. There is no limitation upon the class of im-

Mr. TAWNEY. None at all. Then why can not they get that information and come here to Congress with it, that we may act intelligently as to whether or not the Department is spending more for a given object than in the judgment of Congress should be expended?

Mr. MONDELL. With my high opinion of the intelligence of the gentleman from Minnesota, and his wide knowledge of these things, I am surprised that he suggests that it would be possible for the Forestry Service, occupying a territory of 106,000 acres, three times the size of the State of New York, to come to Congress and specifically estimate for every trail that it might desire to cut in any one of the 105 forest reserves. Why, it would be utterly impossible to make any such estimate; utterly impossible to estimate where they want rangers' cabins, where they want trails. That is a matter of development.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Further than that, I should say to the gentleman from Illinois, the trails to be built and roads to be built depend greatly upon the demand for timber, and that no man can foresee. They may want it in one reserve or in another reserve or

Mr. MANN. It is not difficult; every other branch of the service does the same thing. The Forester here does not know where the trails are to be made. If he is asked to-day where a trail is to be made, he has no conception of it; he must act upon information which comes to him, and eventually it is the ranger himself, the lowest official in the service, who starts it and gradually that sifts down to the head, and when that gets here they must have information upon which to base their action, and there is no more difficulty in submitting that information to Congress with the request than there is to act upon it. Here is a case a good deal stronger than this case—where we are constructing the Panama Canal. We know exactly what we want and yet we refuse to make appropriations without estimates, and we passed a law requiring the Canal Commission to make estimates in full as far as possible, and they did not even know how they were going to build the canal.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Forester does not know what he wants from month to month. What he wants will depend upon the demands made upon him.

They have not found out at Panama whether Mr. MANN. they can build the canal or not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is another proposition. I do not care to go into that.

The time of the gentleman has expired. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon his point of order?

Mr. MANN. I insist upon the point of order. Mr. SMITH of California. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order just for a moment?

Mr. MANN. I am willing to reserve the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, the objection I have and which the West and probably the entire country would have to this line of legislation is the fact that it is predicated upon an entirely new policy which I think the country will not support, and that is that the Federal Government is going into a profit-making business. From the beginning of this Government it has been the unvarying policy to give to the people the natural resources of the country as nearly absolutely free as

And now it is boldly announced by the Departmentand I think it is included in the President's messageforests, the grazing lands, the coal mines, and everything that is left in the hands of the Government shall now be converted into a money-making scheme, with the inevitable result, of course, that the burden will fall upon that portion of the country that is to enjoy these public properties, and that is the objection I have. I have no objection to this money being given to the Bureau, and would be glad to see it done, but not with the understanding that it is the beginning of the policy outlined by the Chief Forester, who states in great detail that within so many years he is going to make so much profit out of the lumber business of the country, for, as I say, that is contrary to the doctrine of this nation from its beginning down to the present time.

We appropriate vast sums of money, running into the millions, for the improvement of rivers and harbors, but we never undertake to make any profit out of them or any return to the Treasury. We have given away all of the public lands of the United ury. We have given away all of the public mans of the States. In the time of our great distress, in 1862, it was said, "We absolutely and without price give a farm to any American if he will go and select it;" and that citizen who wants one, if he will go and select it;" and that policy has prevailed in every Department of the Government from its beginning down to the present time, and I merely TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption right there?

Mr. SMITH of California. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to add just a word right there, that if from 1862 down to 1896 we had pursued the policy of disposing of our public domain that we are now pursuing-namely, for the development of the West would not be as far advanced as it is at the present time.

Mr. SMITH of California. I have no doubt about that. The policy of the Government, I think, is approved by every man who has made any study whatever of our conditions

Mr. REEDER. I take it this question that is before us now is in the same line of disposing of these public lands. pose of this is to retain the waters of the West so that homes may be made on the desert lands. We gave away these lands for homes, and the same theory is being followed in this as was always followed by giving away our public lands.

Mr. SMITH of California. The essence of this provision is the new policy announced by the President and by the Forester, that we are going to conduct the remaining national resources on a profit-paying basis. And I say I do not care to have the advantage gained for the West which is contained in this provision go upon such a theory. That is, I do not want it to raise up in after years to plague us in the West, and say that we allowed this entering wedge of legislation to go by without our objection. Of course we would be glad to have the $500,000 expended in the West, and if it can be expended wisely, and it will be expended wisely, I want it to be done. But I want it to be an appropriation like every other one which the Government makes out of the Federal Treasury—for the benefit of the nation, and not with any view of building up a profit-paying business.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. Has the Chair ruled upon the point of order raised upon this proposition?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. OLMSTED in the chair). The point of order has been reserved pending the discussion. The gentle-man's amendment will be in order later. Will the gentleman from Illinois kindly state his point of order for the benefit of the Chair?

The point of order, Mr. Chairman, is that it is a Mr. MANN.

change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair means that he indicate the portion of the paragraph to which he makes the point.

Mr. MANN. Page 42, lines 14 to 20, inclusive-the entire

Now, I am perfectly willing to have the paragraph remain in, striking out "to be immediately available and until expended," and also "to construct permanent improvements," so as to leave the appropriation "to be used for the proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national for-

This will give them the money, but it would not commit Congress to a new policy in reference to this subject.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think that would be satisfactory. I will accept it in that form.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I had reserved the point of order to the entire paragraph. If I withdraw it, it is with the distinct understanding that hereafter if it is proposed to appropriate this money in a lump sum, without the Committee on Agriculture calling on the Department of Agriculture for some detailed estimate of this expenditure

Mr. MANN. We have an amendment to that effect.

Mr. FIZGERALD. I have an amendment to that effect.
Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.
Mr. MANN. I desire to have the point of order sustained, inserting the rest of the language and leaving out what we ought to leave out.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr.

DAVIS] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, in view of the agreement between the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] I say that I withdraw the point of order as against the entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The other gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Davis] rose, and the Chair desired to know whether he desired to heard on the point of order.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not care to be heard upon the point of order, but I would like to ask unanimous consent for three or five minutes to explain the position of the committee, especially in regard to this matter.

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order, and the gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, there has been considerable said concerning Mr. Pinchot, the present Chief Forester, and also the action of the committee in regard to this particular item. I am not prepared to say whether the new departure, as it is called, is wise or unwise. Yet I wish to say this, that Mr. Pinchot gave the committee very complete information concerning our forestry. He informed us as follows: We have nearly $700,000,000 worth of standing timber on the reservations, which are worth from $1,300,000,000 to $1,400,-000,000. Now, as to what we are doing in the line of employees, he gave us this statement-

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Before the gentleman advances to employees, on the question of the timber that is available, have you information of the character of the timber that we have?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I would say that Mr. Pinchot gave us a complete description of this—I would not say from several of these forest reserves. Bear in mind we have a hundred of these reserves, and comprising 127,000,000 acres of land. This is a vast area, and it would be impossible for Mr. Pinchot or any other man, in the brief time since he has had charge thereof, to give anything like a complete description of the various kinds of timber thereon-

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Well, the question I have in mind is this

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota (continuing). And, furthermore, it has only been in Mr. Pinchot's hands a little over a year, so that to get the details on every point that the gentleman asks would be almost impossible.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have not in mind any detail except far enough to know whether or not he stated that timber is available for milling purposes.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There are vast quantities of it. Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Is there white pine in any considerable quantity?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think there is in the northwest portion. There is some, but not very much.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It has been stated that the white pine of the country was practically exhausted; and that is the reason that I have asked this question.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Now, as to the comparative size of our forest reserves, I am not prepared to state that, but Mr. Pinchot stated that we at the present time have only about rangers and 15,000 supervisors in charge.

820 rangers in the summer and 600 in the winter time, while the Prussian government alone at the present time has 117,000

Now, I wish to say a word in regard to this. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] seem to think that Mr. Pinchot came before us without having considered the matter at all. In my judgment that idea should not go before the country in that form. He came before us asking us for a loan of $5,000,000, and during the discussion of that he said that by the end of 1917 he thought he could get the forest reserves upon a paying basis, and begin to pay back at the rate of half a million dollars a year.

Mr. REEDER. I would like to ask the gentleman about the size of the Prussian reserves compared with our forest reserves.

Was there any comparison made with respect to that?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is impossible to do that, because we did not have the information. Now, I claim this: That Mr. Pinchot stated that he would not need the $5,000,000 at this time, but that he desired at this time $2,000,000. was asked him what he was going to do with $2,000,000 during the coming year. He thereupon presented to the committee a complete, specific detail of how every dollar of that amount was to be expended. For instance, he took up one of these reservations—the Santa Barbara Reservation, in southern California. He says we need telephones, rangers' cabins, fences, etc., and he specified in detail and gave the exact specification of every cabin, every yard of fence, every mile of road, and every telephone that would be built upon every one of these reservations on which he proposed to spend $2,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of California. And in connection with that idea, he expected to make the industries in the West repay this money.

Now, that is the objection we make to the matter.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I am not arguing the question of policy. He expected to sell some timber, and to raise large sums from pasturage, and from various other sources.

In other words, it would save the money that was now going to waste, and protect those forests from the great fires, and so forth; but I simply rose here to explain that Mr. Pinchot did not come before us for a lump-sum proposition, but explained in detail how every dollar of it was to going to be expended.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will my colleague permit an interruption? Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I certainly will, but not for the purpose of discussing this policy.

Mr. TAWNEY. You state that he said to the committee that they wanted to put up telephones and lodges and to build Now, did he give you an idea of what those telephone lines would cost?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I Mr. TAWNEY. How much? He did.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I can not tell you, because I have not had time to read it, but it is stated in the hearings.

Mr. TAWNEY. Did the committee take that into considera-

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They did. He specified how much each cabin would cost, how much each rod of fence would cost, the character and nature of the fence, whether a two or three wire fence, the character of the country, through some of which he said a man could not travel a mile in four hours unless a trail was built. He exhibited a map of each of the forest reserves, showing exactly where the telephone lines were to be run, where each cabin was to be built, and where each trail was to be made, and where each fence was to be built. He gave specific details, showing that in his judgment $2,000,000 during the coming year could be profitably expended. I can not say by what process the subcommittee which framed this bill, that was afterwards acquiesced in by the whole committee, cut this appropriation from $2,000,000 down to $500,000, but I am bound to presume and do presume that they did not desire to have him enter into this building of roads, cabins, and so forth, to quite as large an extent as he desired. fore, by this amount, if appropriated, he will only enter upon the making of improvements upon the reserves where he deems it now to be of the most importance.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands the parliamentary situation, the gentleman from Minnesota withdraws his point of order against the whole paragraph, and the gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order-

Mr. MANN. I made the point of order against the whole paragraph, Mr. Chairman. And if the point of order is sustained, I shall offer as an amendment that part of the paragraph which we agreed to a while ago.

Mr. TAWNEY. Reinstating the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Yes. The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Olmsted). The Chair thinks the point of order well taken. The provision making the appropriation immediately available makes it in the nature of a deficiency appropriation, which should come from another committee—the Appropriation Committee. The provision that it shall be available until expended violates another provision of law that unexpended items shall be covered into the Treasury within a given period, and the construction of permanent improvements as understood by the Chair is not authorized by law, as required by the rule; therefore the Chair sustains the point

Mr. Chairman, I offer as an amendment in lieu of the paragraph stricken out, the following:

And there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000, as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, for the proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national forests.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 13, page 42:
"And there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000, as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, for the proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national forests."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the

Mr. WADSWORTH. I suggest to the gentleman that he retain the words "to be immediately available." This bill does not go into effect until the 1st day of July, and a good deal of the work will probably need to be started in the early spring.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert after the word "dollars," as it now reads in line 16, the words "to be expended;" so as to read, "to be expended as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will be amended as he has just indicated. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] to offer an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of line 20 the following:
"Provided, That hereafter a detailed estimate of the services herein appropriated for shall be submitted to Congress with the other estimates for the Department of Agriculture."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from New York whether he intends that as an independent amendment or as an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FITZGERALD. As an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois as amended by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk, as a new paragraph to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed, in his discretion, to acquire by purchase, condemnation, gift, or otherwise lands in the White Mountain and Southern Appalachian regions, and to care for, protect, and improve the land so acquired as national forest reserves, subject to all laws governing such reserves, and the sum of $3,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be available immediately and until expended as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, to pay the purchase price for land acquired under the terms hereof.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is new legislation and is not germane.
Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman to reserve

his point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I reserve a point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I propose authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire, by purchase or otherwise, lands in the White Mountain and Southern Appalachian region, and to establish thereon a national forest reserve, which is to be administered subject to the laws governing such The sum of $3,000,000 is appropriated for this pur-This amendment seeks to accomplish that which it has been found impossible to do in the regular way. I am offering it as a rider to the agricultural appropriation bill because the friends of the proposition have not been able to induce "the powers that be" to permit a consideration of the measure, in the regular way, upon its merits.

The necessity for legislation of this kind arises from the fact that these mountain ranges in which the majority of the rivers of twelve States have their origin are fast becoming absolutely denuded of their timber supply through the aggressive greed of the lumber interests of the country. It is the purpose of this legislation to preserve the forests, in order to conserve the water supply of the States interested in the legislation. We wish to create, as it were, a reservoir which will hold the water as it falls and give it to the streams which feed the rivers, which in turn furnish the power for the innumerable manufacturing enterprises, as nature intended that it should be given. The leaves and foliage from the forest in these mountains, falling to the ground and decaying, in the course of nature, form a sponge which holds the water and distributes it normally and evenly throughout all seasons of the year.

When the forests become denuded, and they are rapidly becoming so, the inevitable result will be periods of water feasts and famines. The spongy top soil on these ranges will soon be washed off, and when the rains fall the streams will be unduly flooded for a short period, following which will come abnormally low water levels in the streams.

The legislation is therefore necessary to protect and promote navigation in the rivers which have their sources in these mountains, it is necessary in order to protect the water powers along these rivers and the manufacturing establishments dependent upon these water powers, it is necessary in order to protect the agricultural interests along these rivers, it is necessary from every standpoint of wise national policy, and it is of vital interest to twelve great States in this nation, nearly every one of whose rivers have their water supply in these mountains.

We have manufacturing interests amounting to $150,000,000 which are absolutely dependent for their water power upon rivers fed by the waters of these mountains. That is the testimony which comes to the Committee on Agriculture. In the three States of Georgia, North Carolina, and South Carolina alone the capital invested along rivers having their origin in the Appalachian ranges amounts to $40,000,000. tal turns out an annual product of $70,000,000, and upon that capital invested in this way, dependent upon these water powers in these three States alone, 300,000 of our people are dependent for their livelihood. To protect this capital, to protect these thousands of people, is the purpose of this legislation, and can anyone dispute that it is worthy of the consideration of this

It is asserted, and satisfactorily proven, I think, that the losses from floods and freshets in these Southern States alone annually amount to $18,000,000—six times as much as is sought to be appropriated in this amendment.

That there is a strong sentiment in behalf of this legislation is shown by the fact that twelve great States in this Union, through their legislatures, or through their governors, or through other agencies representing them, have petitioned Congress for the passage of legislation along these lines. The Secretary of Agriculture has repeatedly called attention to it in his annual reports; two Presidents of the United States have indorsed the proposition in their annual messages to this body. dent Roosevelt in numerous public utterances has strongly urged legislative action looking to the preservation of the for-ests in these mountain ranges. The Senate of the United States has passed this proposition in three different bills. Committee on Agriculture has reported it several times, and last year reported a bill involving the purpose of this amendment favorably and unanimously to this body.

Mr. Chairman, of course I recognize that this amendment is not in order, and I have offered it only for the purpose of calling the attention of the House and the country to the great importance of the propositions involved in this amendment. It is not necessary, I think, for me to discuss the merits of the proposition, because it would take too long, and my few minutes would not suffice for a proper presentation of the question.

I have risen for the purpose of asking a question of this House. In view of the fact that the Senate has passed this bill three times; in view of the fact that it has been recommended by two Presidents of the United States; in view of the fact that the great Committee on Agriculture, consisting of eighteen men representing various sections of this country and various phases of thought in this country, agree unanimously to this proposition, I want to ask this House why it is that we can not bring this bill before this body for at least a consideration of it upon its merits, as other bills are considered?

The Washington Post, in an editorial on December 31, has this to say:

[Washington Post, December 31, 1906.]

[Washington Post, December 31, 1906.]

THE IMP OF THE PERVERSE.

There must be something radically wrong when Congress, the President, the people, and the American Forestry Association unite upon the creation of two forest reserves and are still unable to have their will. The Post has received from the secretary of the association a circular setting forth these facts, and imploring the assistance of this paper toward overcoming the obstacle, whatever it is, which stands in the way of enacting the desired legislation. The circular says:

"The bill to establish national forest reserves in the southern Appalachian and White Mountains has reached a crisis. This measure is urged by all friends of the forests; it has unanimously passed the United States Senate; it has been unanimously recommended for passage by the House Committee on Agriculture; the President is strongly for it, and a majority of Members of the House are believed to favor it; yet grave doubt exists as to whether it can come to a vote. If this vital measure is to be saved, there is no time to lose."

This is the second instance which has come to our attention indicating that somewhere, somehow, there is a mysterious influence which defies, thwarts, and laughs to scorn the united will of a great people. The first instance was the case of the ship-subsidy bill. In spite of the frantic consolidation and cohesion of the populace, the ship-subsidy bill languishes and threatens to expire. What is the hitch? If this malign paralysis can overcome the ship-subsidy and forest-reserve bills, what may happen next? Is there an obscure spirit of inertia somewhere, an imp of the perverse who delights in throttling projects designed for the benefit of the race? If so, let him or it be run to earth. Let the machinery that registers a nation's will be overhauled. There is a screw loose somewhere. It should be discovered before a crisis even more grave than the forest-reserve bill confronts the American people.

The circular of the American Forestry Association is very good so far as it goes. It calls attention to a great crisis and howls for help. But it does not go far enough. It fails to show what obstructs the course of the mighty measure which has been approved by all the people save one. Until we are made acquainted with the nature of the obstacle how can we join in the task of removing it? Let the American Forestry Association think hard and search prayerfully and see if it can not discover where the difficulty lies.

The Post goes on in its mysterious manner to inquire what

The Post goes on in its mysterious manner to inquire what this mysterious influence is, but does not answer its own question. I submit an editorial from the Baltimore News which answers the question of the Washington Post:

THE FOREST-RESERVE BILL.

[The Baltimore News, January 5, 1907.]

THE POREST-REFEREN BILL.

South Carolina newspapers report a movement among leading citizens and business men in that State in favor of the passage of the Appalachian forest-reserve bill. Governor Heyward is personally assisting the movement, and Mayor Rhett, of Charleston, and other prominent men have signed petitions to Congress urging action. Maryland will dowell to join actively in this movement and unlies with her sister States in bringing every influence to bear in aid of this inestinably important ported to the House by the Committee on Agriculture. With proper-effort now it may be expected that the long agitation in favor of the establishing of this forest reserve will have a successful issue during the present session of Congress.

The pending measure provided for the purchase of an Appalachian Corth Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and Tennessee, and also a national forest reserve in the White Mountains, comprised within the bounds of New Hampshire. The measure has been long under consideration, and has been indorsed by numerous commercial bodies and scientific associations. In 1909 Congress made an appropriation for advocated, Favorable consideration by Congress was recommended by President McKinley in January, 1901, and also by President Rosevelt in December, 1901. In 1904 the Senate passed a bill for the purpose, but the House took no action on it, and the House is still the sticking-point. The only way of overcoming the hostility of the private introduced to the control of the purpose, and the still and the proposed reserves are to be situated destructive lumbering operations are going on, but the case is particularly urgent as regards the White Mountains. There pulp mills are grinding up the forests at such a rate that their destruction is imminent. When the mountain slopes have been demonderation to the passage of the bill will probably be withdrawn, but the Government will then be obliged to spend many times the sum that would now suffice for t

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield? Mr. LEVER. In just one minute, and then I will answer the question of the gentleman from Iowa. I want to say this to the gentleman from Minnesota, that I have no desire at all to make any personal assault upon the Speaker of this House. I have great respect for him personally, as a matter of fact, but I want the House to understand and the country to understand that the mysterious influence in this House-

Mr. WADSWORTH. There was no vote against it in the committee.

Mr. LEVER. That is all. I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa who has just interrupted me that I have no desire to put him in a false attitude, not at all. I know you are going to vote against it. You vote against four-fifths of the good propositions which come before this House. [Applause.] I desire to say, in answer to the gentleman from Minnesota, the chairman of the great Committee on Appropriations, that he misunderstands my motive; I am not inveighing against the Speaker of the House personally.

Mr. LEVER. I want to say to the gentleman I was inveighing against the rules of this House, which puts it in the power of one man to thwart the will of this body and to thwart the will of the people of this country. I believe that we have at least two-thirds of the Members of the House in favor of the proposition, and it does seem to me that when you can demonstrate a fact of that kind there ought to be some way by which this House might be able to register its will in a manner that is effective. That is all we ask

Mr. MANN. There is a very simple way, if the gentleman

Mr. LEVER. A very simple way for the fellows who have got the power, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, but it is a rough and rocky road for us poor devils on this side of the [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LEVER. I think we shall do that the next time.

Mr. LEVER. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], who is a good friend of mine and who has done me many personal favors, that the gentleman from South Carolina is not attempting to lecture the House, but the gentleman from South Carolina reserves his right to be heard upon a proposition in this House, and so long as I stay here I shall reserve to myself that right. Mr. MANN. Nobody questions the gentleman's right to be

Mr. LEVER. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I was saying when I was interrupted, all the friends of this proposition ask is that it be considered upon its merits in this House. Is that too much to ask? We are not begging for this appropriation, none of us are doing that, but we are begging, some of us-ought I to say that?-begging the majority of this House to so change these rules or to so prevail upon that mysterious power as to let us get this simple proposition before the House, where its merits and demerits may be discussed, where it can be examined in an orderly way, and where it can be decided upon by the Mem-That is all there is to it. The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the lands suited to national forest-reserve purposes in the Appalachian Mountains within the States of Maryland, West Virginia, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and Tennessee, and in the White Mountains in the State of New Hampshire, to be known as the Appalachian Forest Reserve and the White Mountain Forest Reserve, respectively, with a view of determining, first, the number of acres of said lands suited to national forest-reserve purposes; second, the number of acres owned by the national and State governments and by private individuals or corporations; third, the number of acres of said lands covered by timber and cleared; fourth, the number of acres of said lands subject to the mineral land laws of the United States.

Sec. 2. That said survey may be made by the Secretary of Agriculture, with the aid and assistance of the Geological Survey and Bureau of Forestry, or in such other manner as he may determine.

Sec. 3. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WADSWORTH (before the reading of the amendment was concluded). Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that. Sufficient has developed to show that it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will say that we have taken a very long time in the discussion of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to detain the committee beyond the five minutes' time which I will have under the rules, but I feel it is my duty to the State of North Carolina, which I in part represent, to add my support reserve appropriation. In addition to the various resolutions which have been passed, Mr. Chairman, by the legislatures of the various States, mentioned by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Lever], and the various petitions which have come up to the House of Representatives and the numerous newspaper articles in favor of this appropriation, Representatives in Congress from the States of Maryland, West Virginia, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, and Kentucky, all of whom are interested in the Southern Appalachian forest reserve, met in the Capitol recently and adopted resolutions indorsing the passage of the bill establishing this and the White Mountain reserve, which has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Agriculture of this House. Those resolutions were presented to the Speaker of the House. There is not the slightest disposition on the part of any Member interested in the Southern Appalachian forest reserve, I am sure, in any way improperly or unjustly to criticise the Speaker. I have no such disposition myself, and I have great respect for the Speaker; but I feel it my duty as a southern Representative in every way in my power to urge the passage of this bill, which has behind it not only the unanimous report of the Committee on Agriculture, but the sentiment of the people of those States vitally interested in these forest reserves.

Now, my amendment proposes, in the event that the House of Representatives does not see fit to pass this bill, which has been unanimously reported from the Committee on Agriculture and passed the Senate, that at least we should have a survey of these forest reserves in order to get the facts with reference to the area and the extent of these proposed forest reserves as a basis for further action. One of the objections which has been urged, Mr. Chairman, to the immediate passage of the bill establishing the Appalachian and White Mountain forest reserves, either as a separate bill or as an amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill, as proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Lever], is that the area of land is indefinite and as yet unsurveyed. Now, my amendment proposes that the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be appropriated, to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture, who is to have the assistance of the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Forestry, for the purpose of mapping out these forest reserves and determining the acreage suited to national forest-reserve purposes, just what cleared lands the proposed reserves contain, what timber lands they contain, what mineral lands, if any, are included, how many acres are owned by corporations and individuals, and then report to Congress. If we can not pass the main proposition this Congress, we who are interested in the Southern Appalachian Reserve and White Mountain Reserve—I should say the the Southern Appalachian Forest Reserve, for I offer my amendment without conference with the Representatives from New England-ask that at least a preliminary survey be made.

I urge that the appropriation be made and that the bill reported from the Committee on Agriculture be passed. But if that can not be done in this Congress, then, at least, we should have a preliminary survey of the proposed forest reserves in which twelve States are interested. The legislature of my own State passed resolutions recently favoring the Appalachian Reserve, and our governor, Hon. R. B. Glenn, in person presented the resolutions to the Speaker.

The advantage and necessity, Mr. Chairman, of the creation of these forest reserves, to my mind, is very clear. I do not think any question of State rights is involved at all. I do not think any question of the Government going into the lumber business is involved. First, the creation of these reserves is a wise public policy. With the increase of the population in this country has come the increase in the consumption of timber, and it has become imperatively necessary that deforestation should be stopped, and there should be timber reserves for the use of the people of the country. The committee say it is in the public interest that these reserves should be held as permanent sources of timber supply. Second, I think the acquisition of these lands by the Government is good business policy, because the timber which would be reserved for the use of the people of the country is increasing in value all the time. western forest reserves, under act of March 3, 1891, are proving profitable to the Government. Third, the creation of these reserves is a necessary policy now or later. The loss of the forest is followed by that of the soil and constantly re-curring floods. The headwaters of many important rivers rise in the Appalachian and White Mountain ranges. The rainfall of both the Appalachian and the White Mountain region is The rainfall heavy, and with the destruction of the forests great torrents of water sweep down from the mountains, which denude the land and convert fertile soil into barren rocks, and therefore it is to the interests of agriculture that deforestation should cease, and that these destructive torrents should be stopped, which have destroyed in the South $18,000,000 worth of prop-

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why does not the gentleman state why, if reservations for forest-reserve purposes are needed in the State, that they are not reserved by the State?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. It is not right to expect the State within which these areas lie to reserve them for the benefit of other States. It is impossible, I would state to the gentleman from New York, for States which suffer from conditions arising outside of their own territory to remedy them by their own action. There has been set aside in the West for the same purpose vast areas of forest reserves.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Out of the public domain.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Out of the public domain, to benefit primarily the people of the West. The interests of the West and the East are too broad to be regarded as sectional, and the benefits proposed here will be national in their character and the expense should be borne by the Government. There are some forests which might be maintained as State reserves—the Adirondacks, for example—but this is wholly within New York.

Mr. JOHNSON. Permit me to suggest to the gentleman that in one day there was from three to five million dollars' worth of property destroyed in my Congressional district by reason of a flood. It came from a region in North Carolina. The State of South Carolina had no jurisdiction over that territory, and we can not protect ourselves by State legislation,

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Yes; that is true. I gave the figures a moment ago that the whole damage in one year caused by floods in the South fed from the Southern Appalachian region was $18,000,000.

Fourth. The creation of these reserves is important for manu-

The recent rapid manufacturing development, particularly of cotton manufacturing in North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, has been largely due to available water power.

In these three States alone cotton mills operated by water power are now established which have an annual production valued at $60,000,000.

If deforestation continues it means a loss of water power and great loss to the manufacturing interests of the South and New England

Finally, the Southern Appalachians and White Mountains are the recreation grounds for the whole nation. The balsamic air and picturesque and grand scenery of these regions are unsurpassed in the world. They are great natural blessings which should be guarded and handed down to future generations. [Applause,]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Kahn having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolutions of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 231. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to sell certain hay, straw, and grain at Fort Assinnibolne;

H. J. Res. 230. Joint resolution continuing the Postal Commission until the close of the present session of Congress.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF CHEMISTRY.

Salaries, Bureau of Chemistry: One chemist, who shall be chief of Bureau, $4,500; one chief clerk, $1,600; one clerk, class 4, $1,800; two clerks, class 3, $3,200; four clerks, class 2, $5,600; one property clerk, $1,600; seven clerks, class 1, $8,400; five clerks, at $1,000 each, $5,000; one library clerk, $900; one assistant property custodian, $900; six clerks, at $900 each, $5,400; one engineer, $1,200; two messengers, at $440 each, $1,680; three skilled laborers, at $720 each, $2,160; one skilled laborer, at $720 each, $2,160; one skilled laborer, three messengers or laborers, at $480 each, $1,440; two messengers or laborers, at $420 each, $840; in all, $47,420.

Mr. MONDELL. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MACON. I make the point of order on line 25 and pages 42 and 43. There is an increase of salary there of $1,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I admit the point of order is good. point of order strikes out the salary of the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, and now I move to insert these words:

One chemist, who shall be Chief of Bureau, $3,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting the words: "One chemist, who shall be Chief of Bureau, $3,500."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I very much regret that the gentleman from Arkansas thought it his duty to make the point of Of course this salary relates to Doctor Wiley, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, who under this bill receives an appropriation practically of half a million of dollars for the enforcement of the pure-food law, having already received an appropriation of $250,000 in the beginning of the year. He has very onerous duties connected with that office, justifying an increase of his salary of $1,000 or even more. Of course if the point of order is made, it is undoubtedly good.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, in response to what the gentleman from Illinois has said out of order, I will say, with the indulgence of the House, out of order, that I apprehend that this gentleman, whose salary is proposed to be increased, should be given the same assistance, by the way, that all these other employees who help him out in his work will be given.

Mr. MANN. That is undoubtedly true; but I think this is very largely his work.

Mr. MACON. Again, sir, I am opposed to this manner of raising salaries.

Mr. MANN. I do not criticise that by any means.

Mr. MACON. I see with every appropriation bill there comes these increases by degrees in the salaries of the various employees of this Government. There is no telling to what extent it will be carried, and I for one will never give my consent to it as long as I am able to rise in my place and object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. MONDELL. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, before we entirely leave the subject of forest reserves I desire to submit a very few further remarks. It is a very important subject to the western country. We have now in forest reserves an area of over three times the size of the great State of New York. We have of land reserved, with a view of establishing further reserves, an area nearly as large as the State of Indiana. Several gentlemen have called attention to the large number of people employed in the Prussian forest reserves. They have not been able to give the comparative areas. I would call attention to the fact that our forest reserves and reserved forest land cover an area larger than the entire German Empire.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not opposed to the policy of national forest reserves. I believe that, taking into consideration the arid condition of our western country, forest reserves are in the nature of a necessary evil. No one can deny that the forest-reserve policy is a policy of paternalism and centraliza-tion, and a policy which should not be extended in this nation further than is absolutely necessary. In carrying out this policy, I care not how intelligent, how careful, or how patriotic the men may be who are charged with these responsible duties, there must be and there will be the hardship and irritation incident to paternalism. We can not get away from certain tendencies under bureaucracy toward vexatious and oppressive practices, but we of the West object to having the reserves used as a means for largely increasing the cost of the products of the reserves to the people of that region. They should not have been and were not established for the purpose of swelling the surplus in the National Treasury. They should be admin-istered for the general good of the country. The people of that istered for the general good of the country. The people of that region should have the right, under fair and reasonable regulations, and on fair and reasonable terms, to use whatever prodnots the reserves contain.

From the time of the landings at Jamestown and Plymouth Rock down to the present day American citizens have had the right to use the products of the national domain, or did have up to the time of the establishment of these reserves, without In the development of every new region in let or hindrance. the country the pioneer has drawn upon the national forests, upon the grasses of the public lands, without expense, to aid them in the development of their regions, and under this system we have grown and prospered mightily as a people. years ago we inaugurated a new policy in regard to the forests of the West, and I have no quarrel with that policy if carried out in the spirit in which I assume it was conceived, for the benefit, not the oppression, of the people, and with due regard to the interests and needs and rights of the people of the region in which the reserves are situated. The products should be sold at a fair price, and further efforts should be made in the administration of the reserves to make the products of those reserves as easily obtainable by the people of the country as possible, instead of making it difficult for them to utilize those products by vexatious rules and regulations. Mr. Chairman, not only do we pay as high as $5 a thousand stumpage for dead and live hemlock and jack pine in my State, where the most ex- our national wealth.

acting private individual would consider himself fortunate indeed to obtain one or two dollars' stumpage on his timber, but in addition the Forestry Service enforces a policy as to cutting, piling, and burning brush and chips and pine needles that raises the cost of lumber from one to two and a half dollars a thousand. Day after day and month after month these requirements are more stringent, more difficult to comply with, until on one reserve in my State the operator paying $5 a thousand for the timber must cut every top and lop into sticks not to exceed 4 to 6 feet in length; must pile them at a given angle, at certain fixed intervals, to suit the æsthetic taste of the forest officer.

A logging crew in Maine or Minnesota or Wisconsin go forth armed with saws and axes and cant hooks and such implements of industry. In my country, under the new regime, they go forth armed with garden rakes and pitchforks, for the purpose of cleaning up chips and pine needles and leaving the rugged mountain forest, hundreds of miles from railroads and the nearest habitation, as clean, tidy, and well kept as the lawns of the Capitol. It is all very lovely were it not a ridiculous and sinful waste of energy and money. This, I say, is the inevitable tendency of paternalism, of bureaucracy. Each and every inspector who goes to that particular cutting on his way to the national park to view the geysers finds it necessary to demand of the operator something not required by his predecessor, in order that he may, for sooth, earn his salary and retain his position in the Service. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not intend a general and wholesale criticism of the Forest Service. the highest regard and respect for the gentleman at the head of that Service and believe the force generally is faithful and efficient. I believe that in the main they are administering these reserves in a fair and reasonable way, but what I have said illustrates the tendency of this sort of thing, the inevitable effect of bureaucratic government, and it will require all the good judgment of the gentlemen responsible for the Forest Service to correct the faults and abuses which have already resulted from the efforts of ambitious men to advance themselves in the Service and make a reputation by using their authority to oppress by ridiculous and unfair regulation and by wringing from the necessities of the people the last penny possible and to prevent the development of this tendency in the future. And still we see on the other side of the Chamber gallant gentlemen, claiming to uphold the principles of Jeffersonian Democracy, jealous of the rights of their States and localities, demanding that the National Government shall go further in this career of centralization, of paternalism, and socialism, and bureaucracy, and buy from speculative owners in their mountains some worthless lands in order to establish Federal control, where the authority of the State, according to their doctrine, should be supreme. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last Mr. REEDER. two words. I desire to say a word in regard to the forest-reserve matter. There are two classes of people who are not properly informed as to the objects and results of these forest reserves. Eastern Members do not realize the devastation being wrought in western forests. Western Members do not seem to realize the purpose of these reserves. These forest reserves are not intended to make users pay higher prices for the products of forests. They are intended to preserve the products of the forests, and thus lower prices of their products This is the purpose and will be the effect. In southto users. ern Arizona within a few years ranges for cattle were nearly useless by reason of overpasturage of the range—there was absolutely no grass. Men had to go out of the cattle business because there was no pasture. If those ranges could have been preserved and a reasonable amount of pasturing done, those people would have a great deal more pasture than they have under the present system or under the system that I hope has just passed out of existence. Here we have forest reserves. If we permit this destruction of the forests to continue, which has been going on since we passed the national irrigation law, June 2, 1902, the time will come when a man will pay $20 for stumpage for any timber he may wish to use, instead of $5. If we proceed with the policy now being adopted as to our forests, that the gentleman from Wyoming complains of, it will cost something to start with, but the time is not far distant when these same people will be getting all of their timber material a good deal cheaper than they would under the process of permitting everybody to go in and destroy what they choose, and permit all the brush and the choppings and everything to remain so that fires might spread through and destroy the forests.

Hence I say there is a misapprehension upon the part of these people as to what the purpose of forest preservation is and what the result will be. The purpose is that we may conserve We have been ruthlessly destroying it for the past six or seven years, so much so that a man with reasonable foresight will see the time will soon come when we will have no marketable timber left. Thus it is clear that this policy is for the best interests of the West. At Boise, Idaho, last fall, at the National Irrigation Congress, I stated that the purpose of the forest reserves is to conserve all of the products of value in the forests of the West; that the man who wishes the timber can cut it to the very best advantage for himself, having in view the future, and the man who wishes to pasture the forest reserves will be compelled to pasture it in such a way as not to waste or destroy, so he who desires to get any of the benefits from our public wealth, as represented in these forests in the way of water, in the way of timber, and in the way of pasture can get all that can be had without destroying that which might be more useful in future. Hence I insist that the people from further east ought to look at this matter in this light, and that what is being done in this line is not only to the advantage of those people who are living there, but of vast adadvantage of those people who are fiving there, but of vast advantage to the citizens who are to come after us. These western settlers are entitled to all those products, but they are not entitled to destroy them this year so that the man who comes later can have nothing from them.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Laboratory, Department of Agriculture: General expenses, Bureau of Chemistry: Chomical apparatus, chemicals, laboratory fixtures and supplies, vality to engine and apparatus, gas and electric current, purchase of all necessary office fixtures, supplies, and necessary expenses in conducting investigations in this Bureau, including actual and necessary traveling and other expenses, telegraph and telephone services, for express and freight charges, labor and expert work in such investigations, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and in collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such experiments; to continue the collaboration with other bureaus and discuss of the continue of the Government whose heads request the Secretary of Agriculture for such assistance, and for other miscellaneous work; for the employment of additional assistants and chemists, when necessary, and for the rent of buildings occupied by the Bureau of Chemistry; to investigate the composition, adulteration, and false labeling or false branding of foods, drugs, beverages, condiments, and ingredients of such articles, when deemed by the Secretary of Agriculture daylesble, and also Secretary of Agriculture of the composition, adulteration, and false labeling or false for the relative for the composition of the composition

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order against the words on page 45, line 18, "and to establish standards therefor." I raise the point of order that there is no law to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to establish a standard.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire also to make some points of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia will have an opportunity to discuss his points of order later. The Chair will entertain his point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the Chair not desire to hear from me on the point of order that I raised?

The CHAIRMAN. Not at present.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order against that portion of the paragraph beginning with the word "proof," in line 18, page 44, and including all the balance of that page and down to and including the word "branding," in line 4, page 45; also, another point of order to that part of the paragraph beginning after the word "countries," in line 14, page 45, down to and including the word "therefore," in line 19, page 45. The last clause also embraces the language objected to or against which a point of order was made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT]. Mr. Chairman, I think there is no doubt that both of these provisions are subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the chairman of the committee desire to be heard?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I am very fast reaching that point where all points of order look alike to me. [Laughter.] Both of these points of order made by the gentleman from Indiana are to language referring to matter that was in the bill last year. That is all I can say about it. If that does not make it law, then they are subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the pure-food law covers all of this question.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Except, Mr. Chairman, that it does not. I have the pure-food law before me, and I am basing my points of order largely upon that law.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps the gentleman has not examined the pure-food law very carefully.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the first provision to which the point of order is made provides an appropriation to enable, among other things, the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the character of preservatives, coloring matter, and other substances added to food, to determine their relation to digestion and to health and establish the principles which should guide their use, and to publish the results of such investigation when thought advisable, provided that before any adverse publication is made notice shall be given to the owner or manufacturer of the articles in question, who shall have the right to be heard and to introduce testimony before the Secretary of Agriculture or his representative, either in person or by agent, concerning the suitability of such articles for food, as to false labeling of branding, and to publish the result of such investigation.

Mr. Chairman, that is clearly new legislation. It is true that provision was incorporated in the agricultural appropriation bill that was enacted at the last session of this Congres

Mr. WADSWORTH. And the year before that, too.
Mr. CRUMPACKER. And probably the year before that, too, it it is coupled with an appropriation. The appropriation is but it is coupled with an appropriation. The appropriation is to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to do certain enumerated things, so there is no room for doubt that it was for the fiscal year only for which the appropriation was made. There is no general legislation authorizing this kind of an investigation, nor the publications provided in this bill, nor the uses for which the investigations shall be made. The pure-food law, on the the investigations shall be made. The pure-lood law, on the other hand, defines expressly what foods and drugs shall be considered adulterated, defines expressly what articles shall be considered misbranded, and the fourth section of that law provides for investigations not exactly of this character, but provides for investigations and publication of results. the section:

That the examination of specimens of foods and drugs shall be made in the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture under the direction and supervision of such Bureau, for the purpose of determining from such examination whether such articles are adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of this act; and if it shall appear from such examination that any such specimen is adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of this act the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause notice thereof to be given to the party from whom such sample was obtained. Any party so notified shall be given an opportunity to be heard, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed as aforesaid, and if it shall appear that any of the provisions of this act shall have been violated by such party then the Secretary of Agriculture shall at once certify the facts to the proper United States district attorney, with a copy of the result of the analysis or examination of such article, duly authenticated by the analyst making such examination under oath of such officer. After judgment of the court notice shall be given by publication in such manner as may be prescribed by the rules and regulations aforesaid.

That is a radically different provisions from the provision un-

That is a radically different provisions from the provision under consideration. It authorizes an investigation for the purpose of determining whether the product is adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the pure-food law, and if the Secretary of Agriculture should conclude that to be the case, notice shall be given to the party from whom the sample was obtained, and he shall be entitled to a hearing, and then the Secretary of Agriculture must certify the result of his investigation to the Department of Justice, and notice of the result shall not be published until after judgment of the court. The provision in this bill authorizes the chief chemist to make the investigation, not for the purpose of determining whether the article is adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the pure-food law, but for the purpose of determining whether it is adulterated for one purpose and another, whether the product is suitable for food or medicine. The notice provided in the pategraph under consideration may be given after an investigation before the Secretary of Agriculture or some agent of his, and it is a dangerous power to put in the hands of a Department officer, I insist, Mr. Chairman. It is a provision that the Congress declined to incorporate in the pure-food law when the question of pure foods and their investigation was up and thoroughly and exhaustively considered. Provisions of that character were proposed and rejected. I have no doubt that it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. McCALL. May I ask the gentleman a question? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield? Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield to the gentleman from Massa-

Mr. McCALL. As I understand, the effect of this provision is to lodge the review in the Secretary of Agriculture, who made the original examination?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. McCALL. And that the pure-food law contemplated a judicial review in court?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The pure-food law provides expressly for a review in court before any publication shall be made.

Mr. McCALL. And the object, then, of this act is to allow the Secretary of Agriculture, or possibly his agent, Doctor Wiley, to sit in a review upon his own decision and oust the court of the jurisdiction conferred upon it by the pure-food law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is doubtless the purpose of it, and it in effect repeals, during the next fiscal year, the pure-food law to that extent. Now, Mr. Chairman, in relation to the next question of order respecting the paragraph:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture, in collaboration with the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists, and such other experts as he may deem necessary, to ascertain the purity of food products and determine what are regarded as adulterations therein, and to establish standards therefor.

That provision is not contained in any law. It was substantially incorporated in the pure-food law as it passed the House, as I remember, during the last session of Congress. It went to the Senate, and then in conference, after full and careful investigation, the whole provision was eliminated from that bill. There is no authority that authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture in collaboration with the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists or other experts to ascertain the purity of food products and determine what are regarded as adulterations therein, and to establish standards therefor. That provision, as far as I know, is not contained in any general statute, and it was not even in the agricultural appropriation bill of last year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, it was. Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will qualify my statement by saying it was not in the agricultural appropriation bill last year as it is incorporated in this appropriation bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. All except the last few words "and to establish standards therefor."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The clause "and to establish standards therefor" was not even in the agricultural appropriation bill of last year, and the whole clause—the whole appropriation—is so interconnected that if any part is subject to the point of order it must all go out. I think there can be no question that both of these provisions are subject to the point of order, and the one I am discussing now embraces the language to which the gentleman from Georgia made his point of order a moment ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Indiana, and think that the portions of the bill to which he has called attention are subject to the point of order. I did not make it myself, because I was content to allow these provisions to go, except the one to which I have called the attention of the Chair and as to which I raise the point of order, and that is that portion which permits the Secretary of Agriculture "to establish standards of food." I do not think that anyone, the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee having in charge this bill, will dispute the fact that this provision is clearly subject to the point of order. recall that during the consideration prior to its passage of what is alleged to be the "pure-food bill" at the last session the effort was made to enact into law a provision giving the right to the Secretary of Agriculture, in connection with certain other gentlemen known as "the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists," to establish standards of food, and as the bill passed the House it contained such a provision, but the Senate struck it out, and the bill as agreed to in conference did not contain such a provision. I do not desire to discuss the point of order simply for the purpose of being heard. I am satisfied that if the Chair will recall the fact with reference to the law on the subject of authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to establish standards that he will have no hesitancy in sustaining the point of order. I am satisfied that the gentleman from New York who is in charge of this bill will readily agree that this part of it is subject to the point of order, so clearly so that the Chair ought not to have any doubt about it.

I started to repeat the history of the legislation in reference to the pure-food bill, when I was interrupted, and to state that the bill passed by the House as a substitute for the Senate bill did have a provision in which it permitted and required the Secretary of Agriculture, in connection with the Association of Official Chemists, to establish food standards; but when that bill went back to the Senate the Senate refused to agree to that part as an amendment to its bill, and the bill went to conference on a disagreement between the two Houses, and the conferees, in the report they made, struck out all the provision in the bill as it passed the House permitting or requiring or au-thorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to establish standards for food products. So that we have no law upon the statute books authorizing this appropriation, and no one, I apprehend, is more familiar with that than the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann]. We have no law, as I understand it, authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to establish standards, and therefore an appropriation therefor is not authorized; nor can we enact such new legislation on this appropriation bill under the rules of the House. In my judgment this provision is clearly subject to the point of order I have made.

Mr. MANN. As to the point of order on the first paragraph, made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], it seems to me that he is in error. The provision in the bill is to enable the Secretary of Agriculture "to investigate the character of food preservatives, coloring matter, and other substances added to food, to determine their relation to digestion and to health." Now, the pure-food law provides that a food is adulterated if it contains any added poisonous or other added deleterious ingredient which renders such article injurious to health, and puts upon the Secretary of Agriculture the duty of determining in the first instance whether that provision of the law is violated.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman point out to the Chair where that is to be found?

Mr. MANN. I read it from the bill in the first instance. read it from the pure-food law, section 7, fifth under the head of "Adulteration of foods." That clearly contemplates that the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine whether a pre-servative, coloring matter, or other substances added to food is poisonous or deleterious to health, and, if he shall determine that, it is certainly in order for Congress to provide the means by which he shall determine it. I do not regard that the matter is of very great importance, because I understand this bill carries an appropriation for the enforcement of the pure-Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsfood law. WORTH], the chairman of the committee, inform us whether this item carries an appropriation of $500,000 for that purpose?

Mr. TAWNEY. Five hundred and four thousand dollars. Mr. MANN. Does this item include the sum of $500,000 for the enforcement of the pure-food law?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does.

Mr. MANN. The sum that is appropriated here?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. Mr. MANN. While, Mr. Chairman, it is clear to me that the first item objected to by the gentleman from Indiana is clearly covered by the pure-food law, the second item probably is not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the opinion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] as to these words, beginning in line 21, page 44, "to establish the principles which should guide their use, and to publish the result of such investigations when thought advisable," down to the proviso?

Mr. MANN. "To establish the principles which guide their use" is a question which depends on the matter being deleterious to health. It may be that the matter is deleterious to health if used in large quantities. It may be that an added substance would not be deleterious to health if used in small quantities, and the Secretary of Agriculture is called upon to determine that under the pure-food law. As to that part of it which reads, "to publish the results of such investigations when thought advisable," I understand that the Secretary of Agriculture has the authority now, under the printing act, to publish the results of investigations made by his Department, in limited numbers. This merely provides a sum of money with which to do it. The authority to print is already conferred on the Department of Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. Then as to the proviso. Will the gentleman give the Chair his opinion as to that? Is there anything new there?

Mr. MANN. That is covered practically by the pure-food law in almost the same language. As to the second provision, where they propose to establish standards, I think there is no doubt that is subject to the point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, in relation to the first provision, it clearly contains new legislation. It authorizes things which the law does not now authorize. "To establish provision, it clearly contains new legislation. It authorizes things which the law does not now authorize. "To establish the principles which should guide their use" means to guide what use? The use of food. Then "and to publish the results of such investigations when thought advisable" provides a totally different scheme of publication from that contained in the pure-food bill. That bill provides that publications shall not be made until after the judgment of the court, and I think it is so clear that no more time need be occupied in its discussion. it is so clear that no more time need be occupied in its discussion.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There is nothing in the pure-food bill prohibiting the publication prior to the judgment of the court. The pure-food bill provides that the judgment of the court shall be published.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It provides that the conclusion of the Bureau of Chemistry shall be published after judgment of the court. Not the judgment of the court is to be published, but the conclusion of the Bureau of Chemistry; and this provision authorizes the publication of the conclusion of the Bureau of Chemistry istry after the Department of Agriculture has decided the question on a kind of ex parte hearing, the kind of hearing that is had by Department officers.

It is so clear I do not feel justified in arguing the matter

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to find anything in the pure-food law that goes to the extent of the ground covered by this proviso. The proviso is very broad:

That before any adverse publication is made notice shall be given to the owner or manufacturer of the article in question, who shall have the right to be heard and to introduce testimony before the Secretary of Agriculture or his representative, either in person or by agent, concerning the suitability of such articles for food, or as to false labeling

It will be necessary that these words should appear verbatim in order that the point of order would not lie that it was new legislation. The only language that the Chair can find in the pure-food law is-

If it shall appear from any such examination that any such specimen is adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause notice to be given to the party from whom said sample was obtained, and that the party so notified shall be given an opportunity to be heard under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed, etc., and if it appear that the provisions of this act have been violated by such party, then the Secretary of Agriculture shall at once certify the fact to the proper United States district attorney etc. torney, etc.

That is a very different provision from this. Mr. MANN. That is the provision which I had reference to; and if the Chair does not think that covers it, that settles the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. As to the other point of order? The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was made on the whole paragraph.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Then, in relation to the other point of order, I think it is conceded—that is, beginning on line 14, page

The CHAIRMAN. It seems there can be no question about that being subject to the point of order; and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, at the end of line 5, page 47.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 5, page 47, insert:
"Provided, That no part of this sum shall be used for the payment of compensation or expenses of any officer or other person employed by any State, county, or municipal government."

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to keep separate and distinct the administration of our national pure-food law and the administration and enforcement of our State pure-food laws. Under the national pure-food law the Secretary of Agriculture has unlimited power. He has unlimited discretion in the matter of its enforcement, subject only to the power of Congress through its appropriations to control the general policy he shall pursue in the execution of this law. When before the Committee on Appropriations in support of an estimate of $250,000 to begin the work of organizing for the enforcement of this law, the Secretary of Agriculture informed the committee that it was his purpose to employ State inspectors; to employ officers of the State for the enforcement of the Federal pure-food law. It is for Congress, therefore, to say whether it shall be the policy of the Federal Government to enter into copartnership with the States in the enforcement of this law or pursue an independent policy. How careful have the States been to keep out of the administration of their domestic affairs the influence of the Federal Government!

Almost every State constitution contains a provision making ineligible any citizen of the State from holding any elective or appointive office in the State who fills or occupies a Federal office. It has always been the policy of the people of the States to keep separate and distinct from Federal administration the conduct of their domestic affairs; and for the same reason the Federal Government should keep separate and distinct the administration of its affairs and the enforcement of its laws from the influence of the State. Without this it will be only a very short time before the Federal Government will be enforcing every State pure-food law in the Union, and we will never know what it is costing the General Government to enforce the national pure-food law. But, Mr. Chairman, there is another reason for opposing the employment of the States' agents in the enforcement of this law. I believe it is absolutely essential for the efficient enforcement of our national pure-food legislation. We can not depend upon State inspectors for the enforcement of this law. Their acquaintance with and the influence of local friends will in many cases result in their overlooking infractions of this law which would otherwise be reported and result in prosecutions and convictions.

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that it is good policy or good administration for us to mingle the enforcement of our national pure-food law with our State pure-food legislation.

When before the Committee on Appropriations Doctor Bigelow and the Secretary were interrogated as to their plan for executing this law. Realizing that we are just about to embark upon an entirely new Federal service, the Committee on Appropriations desired some information as to the plan the Department proposed to follow in the execution of this law, because we knew that under the law the Secretary of Agriculture has absolute and limitless discretion in the policy he may pursue in the enforcement of the law. Doctor Bigelow said:

It is intended to collaborate with the authorities of the States, to work with them, and to take the cases that come from outside States.

Now, collaboration and a copartnership between the State and Federal Government in the matter of enforcing State and Federal legislation, is an entirely different proposition. It is a copartnership that the Secretary of Agriculture proposes with the States to enforce this national pure-food legislation, not collaboration, as he says. I read further from the statement of Doctor Bigelow:

Mr. TAWNEY. To deal with the cases that arise from the sale of food products in violation of this law which have been manufactured in other States and shipped into the State?

Doctor Bigelow. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. How do you propose under your policy to cooperate with the States? Have you worked out any line of demarcation between the expenses for this cooperation—what expenses shall be borne by the Federal Government and what expenses shall be borne by the States?

Doctor Bigerow. Just how that shall be worked out has not been planned, but some employees—

Some employees, mark youwill probably be paid in common, and paid a per diem when on the work of the Department of Agriculture, or possibly some employees working as inspectors within the same State will be on our roll and some chemists will be on our roll. At any rate, it is not proposed that any of the employees of this Department shall be paid for time when working on matters of the State.

Mr. Tawner. Have you thought of this: Would it be feasible to require the States or their agents to furnish the Federal authorities information regarding any violations of the Federal law that might come to their attention in the enforcement of the State law?

Doctor Bigelow. That is what they are anxious to do. They are all anxious to do that. They are anxious to omit the prosecution of a citizen of the State who might be protected by a guaranty from the manufacturer, provided the Federal Government would take up the same case and follow it to the manufacturer.

Now. Mr. Chairman. I submit to the committee that inasmuch

Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit to the committee that inasmuch as we are just beginning to appropriate money for the en-forcement of this new pure-food law, creating a new service, that Congress should exercise its right and its power in respect to the policy, or rather in respect to keeping separate and distinct from State administration the administration of our Federal pure-food law. I hope that this amendment will be

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be adopted, because I think it will increase the expense of enforcing the pure-food law very materially. In the hearings we had touching this subject we had Doctor Wiley before us, and I will just quote from the hearing to show how he proposes to work in collaboration with the State chemists:

Doctor Wiley. Now, we want a large part of this money for the States. We think we would like to spend an average of $10,000 in each State of this sum. The Secretary and I talked it over, and we think that would be a pretty fair start. Some of the States will not require that much, but some will, and quite a number of them will want more, and we think an average of $10,000 will be right, making $460,000, the sum that we ask for.

The Chairman. Take a State as an example, and tell us how you propose to organize it; take any State that you have in your own mind.

Doctor WILEY. Let me take the State of Indiana, which is the one that I am best acquainted with, being a native of that State.

The Chairman. Very well.
Doctor WILEY. Our idea would be to have Mr. Barnard, the chief chemist in Indiana, take this examination.

He refers to the civil-service examination.

He refers to the civil-service examination.

He is perfectly competent to do this, and we would like to have anybody else who is an executive officer who would like to have it take the examination.

The CHAIRMAN. Who is Mr. Barnard?

Doctor Wiley, He is the State chemist of Indiana and does the work in the execution of the State law. Let him qualify, and then we will pay him $8 or $10 a day for the time that he works for us; we will arrange with the State authorities to let him do so. We say to Mr. Barnard, "Here is a case that we want you to examine. You make this examination for us." He will work three or four days for us, and then he will send in a monthly bill stating the time that he has worked. In that way I expect to get in touch with every State.

The CHAIRMAN. You think it would be preferable to pay him by the day for the work done, or a stated salary by the year?

Doctor WILEY. No; by the day. We could not pay a stated salary for the year unless we took his whole time.

The CHAIRMAN. How much would you pay him?

Doctor WILEY. I would pay a man like Barnard $10 a day.

The CHAIRMAN. For the entire day?

Doctor WILEY. The entire day?

Doctor WILEY. The entire day. He would make a statement of the number of days that he worked. He is a man of high character. Some others I would pay $5 or $6. If I could get a man like Winton, of Connecticut, I would be willing to pay him $20 a day, and he would earn every cent of it.

Now, take that case. Assume that the violation of the law is in Indiana. If he did not employ Mr. Barnard, he would have to send a man from here at the cost of the Government, pay him full time, and probably cover a lot of ground that had already been covered by the State chemist. I oppose the amendment simply on the ground that I think it would almost double the expense of enforcing the pure-food law.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will ask the gentleman whether he thinks the expense of administering this national pure-food law by Federal officials would exceed the expense of administering, at the expense of the Federal Government, the Federal national pure-food law and the State pure-food laws combined? Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I do not.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then the expense is in favor of my amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But I say under the limitations put upon the provision by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawney] I think he will double the national expense, because necessarily a lot of this work, as I said before, has already been gone over by the State chemists in the enforcement of the pure-food laws of the several States. Why go over again with a national chemist?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I want to ask the gentleman a question as a lawyer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But I am a farmer.
Mr. CRUMPACKER. It does not make any difference; the gentleman knows the law. Here is a suggestion: The thought came to me that the proposition to have certain administrative officers engaged in the enforcement of the pure-food law, to be under the employment and the authority of the officials of the National Government and of the State government both might lead to serious complications. Now, who is the master? Who will prosecute for violations of duty or of the law? Would it be the Federal Government or the State government?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the gentleman mean for any violation of law by the chemist?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; in the enforcement of the purefood law, the gentleman says, they shall cooperate with State officers. Now, we have a naturalization law in which we require certain State officers to perform certain official functions, and it is a serious problem among lawyers as to whether the Federal Government would be authorized to prosecute a State officer, and thereby embarrass to that extent State administration, while he is discharging the Federal functions, for a failto perform that duty as the law required. It seems to me that the objection from a legal standpoint and from the standpoint of the science of government made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] is tenable. We are to public officers discharging very important duties under two distinct and independent governments. To which are they responsible? To which shall they answer criminally? Which shall have the paramount control?

Mr. WADSWORTH. You will notice that it is proposed to ask them, and they can not act without they do it, to take the civil-service examinations, and then they are in the service of the National Government.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Then if they should violate the law of the State the State could not reach them by its criminal laws, and the State would have secondary control.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; because they are joint servants. They are servants of the State and of the National Government as well.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is the complication that I can see might possibly arise. It is an objection that would occur to a lawyer, perhaps, and not to a practical business man.

Mr. HULL. If a man were acting under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture and is criminally negligent, would there be any question as to who would have control in that case?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No.

Mr. HULL. Then if he has finished with that act and is acting under the State on another line, what would be the difficulty?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If you could separate the functions, certainly it would be all right. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I should dislike very much to see the whole theory of the pure-food law reversed because of an amendment adopted here under the five-minute rule without more mature consideration. From the beginning, from the first bringing in of the pure-food bill, in the report which was made upon that bill, in the statements which were made when the bill was before the House, it has been announced openly and publicly all of the time that it was the expectation that the national pure-food law would be carried into execution in con-nection with the State officials. Here is the situation. An official finds an adulterated article in a drug store or a grocery store. It may be something made within the State. The grocer or the druggist holds a guaranty from the manufacturer. If it is within the State wholly, the State officials must enforce it, but the article may be something made in another State. The druggist or the grocer holds a guaranty from a manufacturer in another State. In that case the prosecution will be, must be, not by the State authorities, but by the national authorities against the manufacturer in the other State. Why should we have two sets of officials to examine the articles in the same grocery store, in the same drug store, in order to determine whether they shall be prosecuted by the State or the national authorities?

I would answer the gentleman by way of-Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. MANN. But I did not ask the gentleman to answer me. Mr. TAWNEY. But the gentleman has asked a question—because we have two laws, two distinct jurisdictions, one Federal and the other State, and each jurisdiction should enforce the observance of its own law.

Mr. MANN. And each jurisdiction proposes to enforce the observance of its own law; but the gentleman, who ought to stand for economy, who complained to me a short time ago because the pure-food law perhaps will cost more than he thought it would, will find that if his amendment is adopted it will cost ten times what it is proposed to cost, and what it will cost otherwise if the State officials are obtained to help in its enforcement.

Mr. TAWNEY. On what basis does the gentleman judge today that the citizens of the United States all over this country are going to violate this law? Do you have inspectors for the enforcement of other laws which are passed by Congress?

Mr. MANN. We have a great many inspectors for the enforcement of laws. We have plenty of inspectors in the internal revenue to-day costing a good deal more than the sum appropriated here. For what? To have the law observed. And there will be more chance of violating the pure-food law in one day than there is to violate the internal-revenue law in a month's time. The pure-food law extends throughout the entire United States. There must be some kind of an inspection everywhere, and the proper persons to inspect are the local and State officials. Every State has a pure-food or health office, and why should the General Government send men there in addition to the local health and pure-food inspector? Why not permit him to report the results of his inspection to the national department and let the national office examine these alleged violations of the law?

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman's argument, and I have not heard the amendment, but I simply wanted to offer one suggestion in the line of the gentleman's remarks, and that is that the constitution of Pennsylvania would make it impossible for anyone in the employ of the State and receiving a salary or fees to act on behalf of the Federal Government. Our constitution makes a person holding an office under one government ineligible to place under the order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Every State constitution contains the same provision.

Mr. MANN. Fortunately the State of Pennsylvania has a very good food law and it is well enforced. Now, of course, if this can not be done by the State officials it will not be done. That is a sufficient answer to that proposition, but here is the position. In the city of New York, in the city of Cincinnati, in the city of St. Louis, and many other cities at present are laboratories for the examination of these articles that are alleged to be adulterated. Why can not the National Government pay the people in charge of those laboratories for the examination of the articles which are alleged to be adulterated in interstate commerce instead of setting up a new laboratory side by side? What is the reason for duplicating the work?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is exactly what is proposed by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is the duplicating of laboratories. There are five or six laboratories estimated here in the interior of this country.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon, it is proposed under this bill to establish a number of new national laboratories, but it is not proposed to establish laboratories in every city in the country where there is one now and—

Mr. TAWNEY. I can name one where it is proposed to establish a Government laboratory where there is a State laboratory

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears-none.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to know if it is the intention of the gentleman or does he expect the Department to have practically all its work done by the State where it may be done locally by the State officer?

Mr. MANN. I understand this is the proposition of the Department, that they will employ probably forty, or such matter, of general inspectors, as far as possible scattered throughout the country. Originally they said one for each State, but it is perfectly manifest that some States do not need an inspector for the State and other States will need more than one; but say there are thirty or forty inspectors, at a salary of $2,000 a year each, which with traveling expenses—for the inspectors will be on the road most of the time—would probably amount to the sum of $5,000 a year to an inspector. In addition to that, the Department expects to use three or four or five additional laboratories to the ones which they now have and to employ chemists, at a salary of $3,000, or such matter, to be in charge of those laboratories, and in addition to that, they have expected to collaborate with the State and local officials in obtaining information in relation to the violation of the law, and where information was furnished to pay them.

The gentleman says that this can not be done. The gentleman forgets that to-day the United States Government pays to the policeman who catches a deserter from the Army or Navy a certain amount of money, and he might well put in the Army appropriation bill that no portion of this money shall be paid to any local official, which would bar the policeman from returning a deserter. But that is the proposition here. Nobody expects to put these men on a high-salaried pay roll.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is given as a reward to the police officers of the municipality or of the States. It is not paid as a salary or as compensation for services.

Mr. MANN. I do not care what he calls it. It is compensa-

Mr. TAWNEY. It is no employment by the Federal Government.

Mr. MANN. Of course it is perfectly out of the question for the Federal Government to obtain the services of the State officers and put them on the pay roll as full-fledged and full-priced officials. That could not be done, because they could not serve both all the time. But a great many of the pure-food inspectors are not engaged busily all the time, and why can not they serve the National Government in those matters that relate to the duty of the National Government, instead of our employing another inspector to work side by side with the State inspector? I do not know how many thousands, but there are thousands, probably, of inspectors connected with the State or with the local officials. Why should we duplicate all of these when, if we obtain their collaboration—their services so far as we need them—we can enforce the law with very small expense? I do not believe we could enforce the law for $5,000,000 a year if we do it as the gentleman says.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I simply want to call attention to the fact that in our experimental work in connection with the State experiment stations we do exactly this thing. We advance a little money for the work and we get the benefit of the work done at the experimental station, both in soil and in the climate of the State, and if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawner] should be applied to all the provisions of the bill all that work would have to stop.

Mr. MANN. And, notwithstanding the State constitution of the States of Pennsylvania and of Minnesota and of other States, these officers in charge of the State experiment station used to get $15,000 and now $30,000 a year, and much of it they receive as salaries properly, notwithstanding the law and the constitution which the gentleman refers to constitution which the gentleman refers to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be adopted. In the State and city of New York there is a large force of men employed in the enforcement of the local pure-food law. It is proposed by the Department of Agriculture to employ men, paid much larger salaries by the city and State, in work to be done for the Federal Government, and as the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth] says, to have these men certify that they have spent entire days in the work of the Federal Government. I have no doubt that any men in the health department of the city of New York who would certify that they had spent entire days in the employ of the Fed-Government, and who accepted compensation for their services, would quickly find themselves out of the employment Men there are paid larger salaries than the Federal Government pays. They have more to do each day than they can reasonably do in a day. They have sufficient to keep them busy, and if they properly perform their duties under the State law known as the "agricultural law," they will have no time to give to the Federal service. The enforcement of this law should be by a distinct and separate force. It will be very easy, and it would be proper, if the State or municipal authorities obtain evidence that a violation of the Federal law has taken place within its jurisdiction, to transmit that evidence to the Federal Government without any additional compensation to the State or municipal officials from the Federal Government. The desire of all of the men employed by the States and municipalities would be to seek opportunities to obtain part of the Federal appropriation in order to increase their compensation and to increase their compensation in that way for doing the very thing required of them by virtue of their employment by the States or municipalities. This appropriation should not be used to enlarge the compensation of the men employed by the States or the municipalities.

Mr. COCKS. I would like to say, for the benefit of the committee, that the plan proposed by the Department seemed to the entire committee to be an entirely feasible and workable plan, notwithstanding the objections made by the gentlemen here.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the only objection that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] offers to this amendment is that it may result in increasing the cost of administering our Federal pure-food law. I do not recall any of the discussions referred to by the gentleman from Illinois wherein he says it was claimed all along during the consideration of the pure-food law that its enforcement was to be effected by a partnership with the several States of the Union. I imagine that if that proposition had been made as the policy which the Government of the United States was to follow in the enforcement of this law he would have had far more difficulty in securing the passage of the bill than he did have.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I maintain that it does not necessarily follow that if we keep separate and distinct under the control and jurisdiction of ourselves the enforcement of this pure-food law that it would necessarily result in increasing the cost beyond the amount which will be required under the policy of a copartnership with the States. If the policy of the Department of Agriculture is to be carried out, how long will it be before the States will discover that their inspectors, being paid from the Federal Treasury for the enforcement of Federal law, must necessarily discover infractions or violations of State laws? How long will it be before they will cease to appropriate money for the payment of State inspectors, leaving the entire burden of the enforcement of the State pure-food laws to rest upon the Federal Government?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is the gentleman from Minnesota aware of the fact that the Government is now paying in many Western States all the expense involved in enforcing the various State laws in connection with the regulation of diseases of cattle, annually aggregating an amount exceeding perhaps thousands of dollars every year?

Mr. TAWNEY. I am aware of the fact, and I am obliged to the gentleman for calling my attention to it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It is so testified on oath before a committee.

Mr. TAWNEY. I was informed a few days ago by the Member of Congress from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell] that before the Federal Government, through its agents in the Department of Agriculture, came to the State of Wyoming and began the investigation of cattle, sheep, and hogs for the purpose of discovering diseases and eradicating them, the State of Wyoming had not only an efficient law on the subject, but also had a corps of inspectors who were enforcing that law; and to-day the State of Wyoming is not appropriating any money for local inspection, but is relying entirely upon the force of inspectors in that State employed by the Federal Government and paid for out of the Treasury of the United States.

So it will be, Mr. Chairman, with the enforcement of this We are now starting a new service. We knowwe all know-how difficult it is when we once embark upon the work of discharging the duties and performing the functions of a State government by encroaching upon the Federal Treasury purpose of defraying the expense, we all know how hard it is to get away from it. But I maintain that here and now is the time, in respect to the enforcement of this purefood legislation, for Congress to take its stand in favor of the Federal Government performing its functions under the existing law and paying from its own Treasury the entire expense. Then we will know what it is costing the people to enforce our national pure-food legislation.

We will also at the same time give the States to understand that they must not look to the Federal Government or expect it to perform and exercise rights which they reserved to themselves, and that they must provide and pay for that exercise out of their own treasury. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I say that it is folly for any Member of this House to say that it is necessary for the Federal Government to go into any copartnership with the States in the enforcement of a Federal law simply because it is more economical to do it. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota will be adopted. I think it will not require any great amount of reflection on the part of the committee to see that unless it is adopted the enforcement of this law will require an increased expenditure by the National Government and reduced expenditure by the State governments. We all know that the present trend of affairs is toward centralization of power, toward saddling duties which ought to be discharged by the State upon the National Government, and putting upon the National Government the financial burdens of the States. I think as soon as we create this mongrel office, part Federal and part State, that little by little the duties of the State official will diminish and little by little the duties of the Federal official will increase, and as a result the compensation will come more largely from the Federal Treasury than from the State treasury. · And let me repeat the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana. To what sovereign would this new official owe allegiance? Would he owe it to the National Government or to the State? Is it wise for the States to have in their midst officers who are paid partly from the National Treasury and partly from the State treasury? How long would it be before such a system would lead to confusion in the administration of these two sets of law, national and State? How long would it be before States would experience the baneful results of the pernicious activity of these Federal officials, paid from the Federal Treasury, in the political affairs of the State? I think there is every reason, drawn from experience and from logic, in favor of the passage of this amendment. We were told recently in a public speech that if the States of this nation failed to act in the interest of their people the Federal Government would extend the sweep of its arm and administer the functions of the States. The Federal officer who made that speech failed to tell us who would be the judges of the neglect of the States, and we must conclude that the self-appointed censors of State action will reside here in the city of Washington and be part of the reigning administration. I do not think that the gentlemen upon this side of the Chamber ought to lend themselves willingly to anything which adds to the powers of the Federal Government by taking away some of the reserved powers of the State governments.

Now, there is every reason why in the administration of this law the officials should be kept apart. Their duties are distinct and they should be separate. The State official has the right to protect the State against contamination in its food supply from every source; not only from foods manufactured within the State and sold there, but from foods manufactured outside of the State and shipped therein for consumption. The duties of the Federal official are quite different from that. He has no right to supervise the sale of food in a State which is manufactured for use within that State, but his duty should be confined to the food which is prepared in the State for export beyond its boundary and the food which is manufactured outside of the State to ship into the State. The very fact that these two laws are different requires their administration by different officials and furnishes the strongest argument why the division between national and State authority should be maintained.

Let us look at the growth of the Departments of this Government for a moment, if we would measure the force of this sweep toward centralized power. Gentlemen who have been here for a long time will remember what little power, comparatively, was exercised by the Department of Agriculture a few years ago and what immense powers it enjoys to-day. Let us look at the new Department of Commerce and Labor and see how its clerks have grown and multiplied and its expenditures along with its clerks. That in itself should give us pause, should warn us to check the tendency of bureaus and Departments of the National Government to encroach upon the powers of the States.

Some men may say this is only a small matter. Of course, it is always a small matter. It has always been in a small way that the liberties of the people have been taken from them. Never is it done by a single act or a single stroke or a single exercise of power, but silently, stealthily, and by small degrees, and if we allow this Department to encroach upon the preserves of the States by small degrees, it will not be long before the last vestige of State rights will have disappeared, and disappeared, I am sorry to say, by sanction of the votes of the gentlemen who sit here as the representatives of the people of the States. [Applause.]

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. Williams) there were—ayes 65, noes 29.

Mr. MANN. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were refused, three Members, not a sufficient number, rising in support of the demand.

Accordingly, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, page 40, line 13, after the word "plants," the following: "To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and ascertain the most economic method of producing denatured alcohol; the cost of the manufacturing plants for its production; the relative value of different materials suited for the production of such alcohol, and the practical uses to which such alcohol can be put, and its cost."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment. I will reserve it if the gentleman desires to be heard upon it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, at this late hour of the day I will not take up much time in discussing this question. I believe that every member of this committee appreciates the importance of this investigation, but I shall not take up any further time. I had hoped that the gentleman from New York would withhold his point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have reserved the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist on his point of order?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I make the point of order that it is new legislation, and it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa care to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HAUGEN. No; I think it is subject to the point of order. I was in hopes that the gentleman would see the importance of the question and that he would withhold the point of order. I think it is a question that we are very much interested in, and it concerns the agricultural interests of this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk change the total there. On account of the point of order raised by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Macon] the total should be $1,000 less.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will change the total.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total for Bureau of Soils, $206,980.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Foster of Vermont, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the agricultural appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Be it resolved by the legislature of the State of Kansas, to wit, that—
Whereas the manufacturers' price on white-pine lumber has increased 100 per cent during the past ten years, as shown by the annexed table of prices, and that yellow-pine lumber has increased in like proportions:

	1897.	1907.
12-inch No. 1 barn boards. 12-inch common barn boards 10-inch roofing boards 8-inch ship lapboards. 6-inch rough fencing 6-inch siding Common finishing lumber Common sheathing lath Common plastering lath	14.50 13.50 15.00 20.00 20.00 9.00	$38.00 30.00 28.00 28.00 30.75 30.00 36.00 23.75 5,75

And whereas the increased price of lumber is due in a great measure to the control of the standing pine and its manufacture by a comparatively few men, and is made possible by the tariff prohibiting the importation of manufactured lumber, and in that manner restricting the tively few men, and is made possible of portation of manufactured lumber, and in that manner restricting the supply; and

Whereas the manufacturers of and holders of lumber have grown immensely wealthy by the reasons above given, until one Frederick Weyerhaeuser's wealth, it is said, equals Rockefeller's; and

Whereas the tariff on lumber adds to the already enormous profit of the wholesalers from $35 to $50 a car; and

Whereas the tariff on lumber is a direct tax to the user and works a particular disadvantage to the farmers of Kansas: Therefore, be it Resolved by the senate (the house concurring therein), That our Representatives in Congress be instructed to prepare and introduce a bill abolishing the duty on lumber; and be it

LITTLE CONTENTNEA RIVER (N. C.) SURVEY.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the Little Contentnea River, North Carolina, from the mouth of same to the town of Ridge Springs, in Greene County, N. C., with a view of dredging, cleaning out, and widening the channel, and to submit a plan and estimate for such improvements.

AMENDMENT OF MEAT-INSPECTION LAW.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry at what time the Senate may expect that the bill introduced the first day of the present session amending the meat law by putting the cost of inspection upon the packers and requiring a label on the cans will be reported from the committee?

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I was not aware that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveridee] was urgent for an early report of the bill. It was my impression that he proposed to offer it as an amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill. I do not recall that he has asked the committee for a prompt report. But if the Senator wishes immediate consideration of the bill, I can say to him that the committee will meet within three or four days and will be glad to give him a hearing upon the bill as a separate measure.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I wish to say that in making the query I make no criticism whatever of the committee for not earlier reporting the bill. I merely wanted to call the attention of the committee and of the Senate to it. It was a provision in the bill which the Senate unanimously passed last year, and it was the provision over which the contention with the House occurred. To save the whole bill the Senate receded upon these two points, with notice given on the floor at the time that the subject would again be brought forward and pressed.

So far as I am concerned, and I am sure others feel the same way, there is no disposition at all to drop this matter. Indeed, there is a greater disposition to urge it than before. my hand advertisements so large that all the Senate can see them, using the language of the bill: "United States. Inspected and passed under the act of Congress of June 30, 1906." That is the kind of an advertisement which the Senator from Vermont correctly pointed out to the Senate last year would be worth millions of dollars to the meat trust. Yet we are not only giving them that, but $3,000,000 a year in cash.

I merely meant by my query not to criticise the committee at all, which, of course, as everybody knows, is one of the most faithful and hardest working committees of this or any other body, but to call attention to the fact, now that so much of the time of the Senate has been consumed in the Brownsville affair, that this matter of amending the meat law along the lines upon which the Senate committee took its position last year will be pressed.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. Nelson, Mr. McLaurin, and Mr. Dubois as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CHANGES IN DISTRICT STREET-RAILWAY TRACKS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I gave notice that on to-day I would call up Senate bill 6147. The Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter] has suggested to me that he would very much like to proceed this morning with the discussion of the unfinished business. I will ask the Senator if we could make an arrangement whereby at half past 2 o'clock those who are debating the unfinished business will yield to me to call up the bill in which I am interested? I think it will not take very long to consider it.

Mr. CARTER. I certainly will be glad to yield to the Senator if I have the floor at that time.

Mr. GALLINGER. With that understanding, I will yield to the Senator from Montana.

SENATOR FROM UTAH.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, with a view of expediting the business of the session I desire to ask unanimous consent of the Senate for the adoption of the following order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed order will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Wednesday, February 20, 1907, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to consider the resolution S. Res. 142: "Resolved, That Reed Smoot is not entitled to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Utah," and that at 4 o'clock p. m. on said day the Senate will proceed to vote upon any amendments that may then be pending or offered, and thereupon the resolution itself, without further debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the order proposed?

Mr. LODGE.

Mr. LODGE. On what day? Mr. BURROWS. The 20th of February. Mr. ALLISON. I think the order should be subject to the consideration of the appropriation bills at that late day.

Mr. BURROWS. Then there would be no object in securing the order. We certainly ought to have a vote on the resolution before the Congress ends.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to interfere in this matter, but I should think that we might be in a situation then which would require the attention of the Senate to appropriation bills.

Mr. BURROWS. The Senator will bear in mind that this is a privileged matter, subject to call at any time under the rules, and I think it is the general desire on all sides to have it disposed of. In the meantime if debate is desired there will be ample opportunity for it, and at 4 o'clock on the day named the Senate will take a vote on the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the proposed order?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator from Michigan whether or not he has conferred with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] about the date proposed?
Mr. BURROWS. I have.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is satisfactory to him?

Mr. BURROWS. It is agreeable to him, agreeable to the members of the committee, and to Mr. Smoot himself.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the order pro-

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, at this late day in the session, with so many appropriation bills not considered, I think every unanimous-consent agreement should except appropriation bills. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] yesterday made a request of that kind, and said that if he were present he should object. I see that that Senator is not in his seat.

Mr. BERRY. He is in the Chamber.
Mr. FRYE. If he is in the Chamber, I have nothing to say.
Mr. BURROWS. In view of the fact that it is a privileged matter and can be brought before the Senate at any time by a vote, I thought it would expedite business very much to have an hour fixed when the vote should be taken-not to have a long debate, but to have a vote upon the resolution.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the junior Senator from Maine?

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly.

Now that the Senator from Maine has returned Mr. FRYE. to his seat, I will state that I was saying he yesterday indicated that he would object to any unanimous-consent agreement unless the appropriation bills were excepted.

Mr. HALE. I think the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has already made that suggestion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the order?

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

Objection is made. The VICE-PRESIDENT.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President— Mr. BURROWS. A moment, Mr. President. Do I understand objection is made?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the order as proposed.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, if objection is made, I desire to state that I shall feel it my duty, of course, to press the consideration of this resolution with as much earnestness as its privileged character will permit.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Iowa will withdraw his objection. Personally I should like to have a vote upon this matter at an early date. As to the day which has been suggested, if the Senate thinks that would interfere at all with the consideration of appropriation bills, I shall be glad to have the time for a vote placed at an earlier date.

I will say, in addition, that rather than take any further time of the Seante in this matter, if an earlier date would suit the convenience of the Senate, I should be perfectly willing to let the vote be taken without any further discussion. I hope the Senator from Iowa will withdraw his objection and let the vote be taken upon the resolution.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Iowa will allow this matter to be voted on. It has now been before the Senate for almost three years. A day being fixed, not any more time will be consumed. I therefore ask the Senator from Iowa, under the circumstances, in consideration of the impor-tance of the matter and in view of the fact that all concerned are anxious to have a vote, not to insist on his objection.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I could not hear the observations of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Dubois]. I do not wish to interfere with the vote upon this resolution or with its consideration. I know it is an important matter, and I believe it should be disposed of; but it is customary at this stage of the session that appropriation bills, when they are ready for action, should be promptly taken up and disposed of.

As I understand the resolution proposed by the Senator from Michigan, it is practically to occupy the day on the 20th of

February

Mr. BURROWS. Not necessarily. There will be discussion, I presume, and remarks on the matter between now and that date.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope so.

Mr. BURROWS. The order simply provides that at 4 o'clock on the day named a vote shall be taken on the resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand that the vote will be taken at 4 o'clock—a specified time?

Mr. BURROWS. At 4 o'clock, as specified in the order.
Mr. ALLISON. And nothing else?
Mr. BURROWS. No.
Mr. ALLISON. That is to say that the question shall be taken up at 4 o'clock and disposed of?

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly. Mr. ALLISON. I supposed the day was to be devoted to Mr. BURROWS. No; not necessarily.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the order be again read, Mr. President.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order proposed by the Senator from Michigan will be again read.

The Secretary read the order proposed by Mr. Burrows, as

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Wednesday, February 20, 1907, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to consider the resolution S. Res. 142: "Resolved, That REED SMOOT is not entitled to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Utah," and that at 4 o'clock p. m. on said day the Senate will proceed to vote upon any amendments that may then be pending or offered, and thereupon on the resolution without further debate.

Mr. ALLISON. To that I object. Mr. BURROWS. I was in error in stating that the resolution was not to be taken up after the conclusion of the routine morning business.

Mr. ALLISON. I thought the Senator must be mistaken.
Mr. BURROWS. Under the proposed Under the proposed order the resolution is to be taken up at the conclusion of the routine morning business. If that is objectionable to the Senator, I have no objection to striking that out, and simply provide that on the 20th day of February, at 4 o'clock, a vote shall be taken on the resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not objectionable to me. I have no objection objection of the resolution of the resolution of the resolution.

jection to interpose to the consideration of the resolution. I know it is a privileged question. I only wish to call attention to the fact that here was a day to be devoted to this subject, and that the usual exception, which is made in all resolutions at this stage of the session as to the consideration of appropriation bills, was not provided for.

I withdraw any objection to the consideration of the order as the Senator has modified it.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I suppose there is nothing in that order which will prevent the discussion of the general subject at any time prior to that date.

Mr. BURROWS. Oh, no.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the adoption of the order proposed by the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BACON. I understand the order as present from Iowa [Mr. Allison], I have no objection to the adoption of the order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the order submitted by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Burnows] as modified. The order as modified is agreed to.

ISSUANCE OF LAND PATENTS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by Mr. Carter January 9, 1907, relating to the issuance of patents on homestead entries, etc.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I can assure the Senate that only a sense of duty could impel me to ask any considerable portion of its time at this late stage in the short session. It is known that adjournment must occur on the 4th of March, and it is likewise well known that the regular business of the session will engross the attention of the Senate for nearly every available hour of the time intervening between this and that date.

I had long hoped, and earnestly hoped, that the subject to which I feel constrained to address myself briefly to-day might not imperatively call for the remarks I feel called upon to make. The serious aspect of the case is presented by the demand for the cooperation of the legislative department of the Government in a policy of the Interior Department which, according to my judgment, is wholly un-American and utterly indefensible—a policy of the Interior Department under which untold hardship has been inflicted upon a large and worthy class of our citizens living beyond the Mississippi River.

The appropriation called for by the Interior Department necessarily involves a complete reversal of the policy of this Gov-ernment, steadily, successfully, and beneficently pursued for nearly fifty years with reference to settlers on the public domain.

The resolution presented by me on the 9th of this month, to which I briefly call the attention of the Senate this morning, reads as follows:

Resolved. That under the homestead laws of the United States a duly qualified entryman furnishing competent evidence of full compliance with said laws and all rules and regulations promulgated by authority thereof is, in the absence of contest or of any charge or evidence of fraud or mistake, legally entitled to a patent for the land embraced in the entry as to which final proof has been so furnished, and no executive officer is authorized to forbid and prevent the issuance and delivery of such patent.

The resolution is called forth by an order of the Secretary of the Interior directed to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated on the 18th of December last, and instructing that officer as follows:

That no patent be hereafter issued to public land under any law until by an examination on the ground by a special agent of your Office, or such other officer or agent of this Department as may be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, actual compliance with that law has been found to exist.

This order of the honorable Secretary of the Interior expresses his final estimate of the truth and veracity, the honor and integrity, and the good faith of all the settlers on the public domain of the United States.

It likewise calls into question the good faith of every individual having dealings of any kind, character, or description with the Government of the United States in reference to the public lands. The order is without precedent in the history of the Government. It is without parallel in the history of any government, save as applied to provinces, classes, or individuals suspected of treasonable designs. It is the culmination of a policy unwarranted in fact and founded only on baseless suspicion. The public records demonstrate that the order is not only needless, but harsh, cruel, and oppressive.

For the last six years sensational reports of evil doings in the public-land States have been emanating from the Interior Department from day to day so sweeping in their scope as to create the impression in other sections that the entire western population is, and has been, engaged in a veritable saturnalia of criminal conspiracy, fraud, and perjury over the whole broad surface of the public domain. Since 1901 insidious interviews and boisterous proclamations have passed from the Interior Department to the public press reflecting upon all those seeking title to public lands. The words "grafters," "land grabbers," "conspirators," "looters of the public domain," and like terms have become a part of the vernacular of the Secretary's office in referring to public-land entrymen of all kinds. The routine work of the land service has been pillaged in quest of items for publication reflecting on individuals and communities. The slightest irregularity savoring of scandal or possible sensation has been diligently exploited before, during, and after investigation. Everyone was indicted and no acquittals were ever recorded in these scandalous reports. The exploitation of evil reports has been a conspicuous feature of the present Secretary's administration. Fraud has been constantly and vociferously shouted from the house tops. Every item or incident colorable by suspicion into sensational appearance has been given wings. Ordinary occurrences have been magnified into the semblance of great events. On the assumption that our settlers are land thieves in the main, the most odious, oppressive, and exasperating treatment has been meted out to them in numerous cases for the last five or six years. Residents of the public-land States no longer enjoy the presumption of innocence, but rather face the presumption of guilt. They are charged with conspiracy to despoil their own States, to limit their future possibilities by oppressing themselves, and with cheating their Government in the interest of grasping speculators. No exceptions are made by the order of December 18.

Should some morbid moral delinquent pay nightly visits to the dens of vice and make morning calls at the police courts in all your splendid eastern cities, and then announce to the world from day to day with loud acclaim that crime and moral leprosy overwhelmed you all, he would, at his pitiable best, play in rosy overwhelmed you all, he would, at his pitiable best, play in your field the part the Secretary of the Interior and his cohorts have played as regards the people of the public-land States for the last six years. Unchecked by contradiction, emboldened by nonresistance from the West, and unmerited applause from other quarters, the Secretary finally violated the legal rights and assailed the veracity and integrity of hundreds of thousands of entrymen on the public domain by and through the brief order complained of. Excluding the timbered area of the Northwest, the people of every locality in the country concerned well knew that as to their locality the oft-repeated charges of the Secretary were unfounded to any justifiable extent; but they supposed, being in possession of the public records, that that official knew of flagrant violations of the law in other sections. If frauds were being perpetrated in the acquisi-tion of public land, the settlers of every locality in the West desired them stopped and the perpetrators punished. As to their several neighborhoods residents generally knew the charges were wrong, whereas all the people outside of the public-land States believed the charges were well-founded, and so believing applauded the Secretary as engaged in a righteous crusade against crime. The fact that every fraudulent transaction complained of was initiated and consummated under the administration of the present Secretary was not given publicity. Few have stopped to consider the slender basis of the charges made indiscriminately against 15,000;000 of people inhabiting fourteen States and three Territories.

Notwithstanding the expenditure of an excessive amount of money by the present Secretary, the truth remains to be told that the percentage of fraudulent public-land entries for the last eight years, disclosed by investigation, bears about the same annual proportion to the whole number of entries as obtained during each of the preceding forty years. It remains to be shown by the records that the present Secretary of the Interior has been less efficient during his eight years of service in challenging erroneous, improper, or fraudulent land entries than were his four predecessors during the eight preceding years. Even the abuses under the so-called "timber and stone law." which the Secretary might have stopped any day, are shown by the records to have been shamefully exaggerated.

I fully realize that even the President of the United States has been deceived and alarmed by the current, oft-repeated, and uncontradicted reports of the Secretary. The President has not been able to go through the records and into the details of the Interior Department and its operations. Burdened with more work than any of his predecessors have undertaken, the President must accept the statements of his subordinates as He can not check and countercheck them all.

The President must rely upon the statements of his subordi-If he can not place implicit reliance upon the statements of a Cabinet officer, he is in a deplorable condition indeed. He has relied on the reports of the Secretary of the Interior, as have the people generally outside the States to which his accusations apply. The President and all others misled by the crusade of misrepresentation are clearly free from responsibility, except to hear the truth as told by the Government records, and then to do even-handed justice to an outraged people.

In the name of justice, in behalf of more than 300,000 entrymen on the public domain; in the name of the families dependent upon them, and of their discredited neighbors, who may be witnesses in their behalf, aggregating substantially 2,000,000 people accused and injured, I ask for a hearing from the Senate, the President, and the country on the cold and silent facts as disclosed by the Government records.

Let us begin with the homestead settlers, specially referred to in my resolution. To the twenty-odd thousand entries under other than the homestead laws, and cases contested or protested. I will advert later.

On the 30th of June, 1906, the original and final homestead entries of record in the General Land Office aggregated 285,049, and the number remains substantially unchanged. On the conservative assumption that the family of the homestead settler will average five persons, it follows that 1,425,245 deserving people, young and old, are directly concerned.

The 285,049 homestead entries referred to stand unchallenged and entitled to full faith and credit on the public records. The men, women, and children residing on the homesteads, aggregating in round numbers one and a half million souls, are the home builders of the nation, battling with hard conditions on the firing line of civilization.

They are the same class of people who felled the trees, grubbed the stumps, and prepared the fertile fields of Ohio; they are the same class of people who turned the sod of Indiana and Illinois; they are the same class of people who gave to the country men of the Lincoln stamp; they are the same class who brought the rolling prairies of Iowa from a state of nature to a state of superb fertility; they are the same people who reduced Kansas and Nebraska and conquered every arable acre under cultivation between the Alleghenies and the Pacific Ocean. For this class of people this hearing is sought. are as honest to-day as when they felled the trees and grubbed the stumps in Ohio; they are as honest to-day as when they cheerfully gave their best manhood in defense of the flag of this They are entitled to the consideration of a fair hearing, and to a just, honest, and fair-minded administration of the laws of this land.

Heretofore, Mr. President, this worthy class of people has been honored by the country and encouraged by the Government. The order I have quoted at once reverses the policy of the Government established in the days of Abraham Lincoln and continued in unbroken line down to the present administration of the Interior Department. The order strikes a deadly blow at the material interests of these people and proclaims them all, without exception, a band of thieves, unworthy of belief under oath as to any transaction with the Government of the United States. Yes, it goes further still, for it discredits the two witnesses required to corroborate the final proof of each entryman, thus announcing the conviction of the Hon. Ethan Allen Hitchcock, Secretary of the Interior, that there are now more than three-quarters of a million citizens of the public-land States living on homesteads and attempting to develop the country in the West who are not worthy of belief under oath; and it is practically asserted by the order that this vast body of men are engaged in a conspiracy involving fraud, perjury, and theft. exception is made. None are worthy of belief, according to the honorable Secretary's most extraordinary order, for no land patent will be issued on the final proof submitted by any of them until a special agent of the Land Office or an officer or agent designated by the Secretary of the Interior makes an examination on the ground to see whether or not they have told the truth about matters of fact so palpable that he who runs may

To those familiar with our land laws and conversant with the trials, tribulations, and experiences of the homestead settler, this order is the very refinement of cruelty and oppression. In this conclusion I think all patriotic men will agree with me when they have become advised of the truth, and those who have heretofore supported this policy of aggression against the settlers will, with the ordinary American sentiment in favor of fair play, speedily and with zeal undertake to right the wrong done these people.

What is the homestead law? What is the procedure under it to acquire title to public land, and what do the Land Office records disclose as to fraudulent entries and practices under this law? Sections 2289, 2290, and 2291 of the Revised Statutes of the United States contain all there is of the homestead law except the portion relating to fees

I will ask the Secretary to read these three sections, or, what might be better still, I will include them in my remarks, to the end that anyone desiring to know what the homestead law is may have the text of the statute in connection with the remarks I submit.

Mr. President-Mr. KNOX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly; I am glad to yield.
Mr. KNOX. I suggest that the sections referred to by the Senator be read at the desk. I think it would be interesting and informing.

Mr. CARTER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read, at the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania, the sections referred to. The Secretary read as follows

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read, at the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania, the sections referred to. The Secretary read as follows:

Sec. 2289. Every, person who is the head of a family, or who has arrived at the age of 21 years, and is a citizen of the United States, or who has filed his declaration of intention to become such, as required by the naturalization laws, shall be entitled to enter one-quarter section or a less quantity of unappropriated public lands, to be located in a body in conformity to the legal subdivisions of the public lands; but no person who is the proprietor of more than 160 acres of land, in any State or Territory shall acquire any right under the homestead law. And every person owning and residing on land may, under the provisions of this section, enter other land lying contiguous to this land, which shall not, with the land so already owned and occupied, exceed in the aggregate 160 acres.

SEC. 2290. That any person applying to enter land under the preceding section shall first make and subscribe before the proper officer and file in the proper land office an affidavit that he or she is the head of a family, or is over 21 years of age, and that such application is honestly and in good faith made for the purpose of actual settlement and cultivation, and not for the benefit of any other person, persons, or corporation, and that he or she will faithfully and honestly endeavor to comply with all the requirements of law as to settlement, residence, and cultivation necessary to acquire title to the land applied for; that he or she is not acting as agent of any person, corporation, or syndicate to give them the benefit of the land entered, or any part thereof, or the timber thereon; that he or she does not apply to enter the same for the purpose of speculation, but in good faith to obtain a home for himself or herself, and that he or she mas not directly or indirectly made, and will not make, any agreement or contract in any way or manner with any person except himself or

Mr. CARTER. The concluding phrases, "as in other cases provided by law," relates merely to departmental procedure, which is set forth under the heading "Land Patents," on page 85 of the General Land Office circular issued in 1904.

The sections quoted are, with slight amendments, as they appeared in the law when signed by President Lincoln in 1862, and experience has shown that they constitute the wisest and most beneficent body of public-land law ever devised by the genius of man.

The homestead law has been one of the chief inspirations of home life, domestic virtue, State pride, and national patriotism in the West for nearly half a century. Homes, States, counties, cities, yes, and a typical sterling manhood and womanhood are its imperishable monuments.

The procedure in the Land Office is simple, but effectively arranged to call forth ample if not unerring evidence of comranged to call forth ample it not unerring evidence of com-pliance with the law. After filing, the claimant must reside upon the land continuously for five years. As the public domain is constantly diminishing and nearly all the very desirable claims are taken up, it follows that absence or neglect on the part of a claimant will be quickly taken advantage of by some watchful home seeker. The Government encourages contests against delinquent or dishonest entrymen by giving to any successful contestant who is qualified the preference right to file on the land for thirty days after cancellation of the entry successfully con-This preference right given the contestant makes of every home seeker a vigilant inspector of all the homestead entries in his section of the country. Thus from the very day he files on the land the settler is subject to the keen scrutiny of interested persons anxious to contest his claim if cause be given, Then after the five years' residence and the substantial improvement of his land the claimant is required to prove up. means that he must publish notice of his intention to make final proof for thirty days in the newspaper of general circulation published nearest the land designated by the register of the land office.

At the time and place named in the notice and before the designated official the entryman must appear, accompanied by two of the witnesses named in his notice. The testimony of the claimant and the witnesses is then and there reduced to writing in a public office. They must respond to searching interrogatories prepared by the General Land Office, for the purpose of bringing forth the facts with reference to settlement, improvement, and continuous residence upon the land. Having this purpose in view, fourteen distinct interrogatories must be specifically answered by the claimant himself, and each of the witnesses must separately answer twelve distinct and searching interrogatories, and the answers to each and every one of these must show full and complete compliance with the law by the homestead entryman. The testimony of the witnesses must be taken at the same time and place and before the same officer as claimant's final affidavit. The answers must be full and complete to each and every question asked, and officers taking the testimony are admonished to make no mistake in dates, description of land, or otherwise. Finally the claimant and witnesses may be cross-examined at the pleasure of the Department, its officers, or agents.

In order to bring forth all the essential facts with reference to residence, cultivation, qualification, the General Land Office has prepared fourteen distinct interrogatories upon blanks furnished the land officers. These interrogatories must be specifically, clearly, and unequivocally answered by the claimant. There are twelve searching interrogatories directed to each of his witnesses, and, finally, the land officers or any special agent of the Land Office or the Interior Department may then and there cross-examine the applicant or either of his witnesses. The answers of course must be full, complete, and adequate in order to show the man's right to the certificate or the patent on the blanks furnished by the Land Office for these final proofs is printed section 5392 of the Revised Statues of the United States, which reads as follows:

TITLE LXX-CRIMES-CH. 4.

SEC. 5392. Every person who, having taken an oath before a competent tribunal, officer, or person, in any case in which a law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered, that he will testify, declare, depose, or certify truly, or that any written testimony, declaration, deposition, or certificate by him subscribed is true, willfully and contrary to such oath states or subscribes any material matter which he does not believe to be true, is guilty of perjury, and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $2,000, and by imprisonment at hard labor for not more than five years, and shall, moreover, thereafter be incapable of giving testimony in any court of the United States until such time as the judgment against him is reversed. (See sec. 1750.)

The homestead final proof is made after more lengthy notice and with as much publicity and regularity of procedure as obtains in the probate of a will disposing of millions in real and personal property under the laws of the several States or the District of Columbia. The unchallenged witnesses to a will are not discredited by our courts, but it is different in the Interior Department, for the honorable Secretary, by the order of December 18, impeaches all men who appear as claimants or witnesses in land cases. These settlers on the public domain are met, after these solemn proceedings, with a command from the Department of the Interior to repair to their homes and there wait until a special agent comes around to ascertain whether they have lied or not. It seems that the order is framed upon the theory that truth and veracity are below par, even under the solemnity of an oath, when you pass west of the Mississippi River. The Secretary by this order impeaches every claimant who appears at one of these proceedings to prove up. He impeaches every witness who appears. He denounces each and all as unworthy of belief.

The notice required must be shown by affidavit of the publisher to have been published for thirty days, and it must appear clearly that the proof is ample and sufficient before the register and receiver are authorized to pass favorably upon the entry. When the proof is thus favorably passed upon, the case is fully made up under the law, rules, and regulations. The claimant has stood the scrutiny of all his neighbors and of interested and anxious home seekers for five years. He has filed his own sworn statement and the sworn statements of two competent and disinterested witnesses, made in public after thirty days' notice, all showing full and satisfactory compliance with the law. All acts and proceedings have been in the open. Having thus finally and fully complied with the law and produced evidence of such compliance, in accordance with the law and the departmental requirements, the entryman, in the language of the stat-, ute, "shall be entitled to a patent."

Where the final proof has been regularly made, and approved by the Land Office officials, the legal right of the claimant to a patent on the submission of such proofs, in the absence of fraud or mistake charged in the specific case, has been always heretofore recognized by the Interior Department. That right has been affirmed over and over again by the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Department of Justice is on record, through one of its ablest Attorneys-General, in affirmance of the right.

It was held by the honorable Secretary of the Interior in the case of the Kern Oil Company v. Clarke (30 L. D., 556) that-

In the disposition of the public lands of the United States under the laws relating thereto, it is settled law: First, that when a party has complied with all the terms and conditions necessary to the securing of title to a particular tract of land, he acquires vested interest therein, is regarded as equitable owner thereof, and thereafter the Government holds the legal title in trust for him; second, that the right to a patent once vested is, for most purposes, equivalent to a patent issued, and when, in fact, issued patent relates back to the time when the right to it became fixed.

This holding of the Interior Department is sound law, except that in absence of any charge of fraud or mistake the words in the opinion "for most purposes" should be stricken out and the phrase "for all purposes" inserted in lieu thereof. With this amendment, certainly pertinent as far as homestead cases are concerned, the Department but recognizes the law as repeatedly announced by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Would it interfere with the course of the Sen-Mr. FULTON. ator's argument if I were to ask a question?

Mr. CARTER. Not at all.

Mr. FULTON. There is one phase of this matter which the Senator from Montana has not discussed and concerning which I have not been able to ascertain the facts, and that is this: It is proposed to appoint these inspectors or special agents to go out and investigate a man's homestead, ascertain whether or not be has complied with the law, after he has made his final proof. Now, to whom do the agents make report, and does the entryman have any opportunity to meet the report if an adverse one? I have not been able to learn that he is given any such opportunity.

I will say in connection with that, as evidencing how very unjust this order is in its operation, that I have received many letters lately-indeed I have been receiving them all the winter, and for something like a year past perhaps, because practically this system has been in operation in the State of Oregon for the last year or two; all final proof has been suspended-in many cases I get letters from entrymen saying that they have made their proof; that the inspector or agent has been on the land and examined it, and yet they do not know what the report was. They hear nothing from it, and they can get no word whether the entry is approved or not.

The very gross injustice of this proceeding can be understood when it is taken into consideration that these men get no opportunity to cross-examine the agent. He goes out there as the representative of the Department, and really imbued with the idea that it is his duty to find fraud. He makes a report, and that overcomes the testimony of the homesteader and his witnesses. They have no opportunity to meet him or to see his report or to cross-examine him, although they have been subjected and submitted to cross-examination.

Mr. CARTER. I will endeavor to reach that phase of the

Mr. CARTER. I will endeavor to reach that phase of the matter a little later. The special agency service is in the nature of star-chamber proceedings.

At the present time I should like permission of the Senate to fix the question of the legal right, upon the submission of proof, to the patent, as prescribed by law. Passing from the holding of the Interior Department, I call the attention of the Senate to the views of the Supreme Court of the United States.

In the case of Witherspoon v. Duncan (4 Wallace, 210), the court considered a case wherein it appeared that a portion of the public domain within the limits of the Territory of Arkanwas ceded by treaty to the Cherokee Indians west of the Mississippi, and provision was made by the treaty for the removal of settlers from the lands ceded to the Indians. As indemnity for the loss of improvements, trouble, and expense of removing, each settler was granted the right to take other public land situated in Arkansas in lieu of the land surrendered. A claim based on one of these lieu-land rights was presented to the land office at Little Rock, Ark., with appropriate proofs, and thereupon a certificate of entry was issued for the lieu land in May, 1830. The patent for this land did not issue until 1846. In 1842 the land was listed for taxation under the State laws, and thereafter sold for nonpayment of taxes. The question before the court was the validity of the tax levy and sale. If the lands in question were public lands of the United States, they were not taxable. If regarded as private lands, they were subject to taxation. In disposing of the case the court said:

In no just sense can lands be said to be public lands after they have been entered at the land office and a certificate of entry obtained. If public lands before entry, after it they are private property. * * * But it is insisted that there is a difference between a cash and a donation entry; that the one may be complete when the money is paid, but the other is not perfected until it is confirmed by the General Land Office and the patent issued. * * * If the law on the subject is complied with and the entry conforms to it, it is difficult to see why the right to tax does not attach as well to the donation as to the cash entry. In either case, when the entry is made and certificate given, the particular land is segregated from the mass of public land and becomes private property. In the one case the entry is complete when the money is paid; in the other when the required proofs are furnished. In neither can the patent be withheld if the original entry was lawful.

Again, the Supreme Court in the case of Van Brocklin v. State of Tennessee (117 U. S., 169) said:

And the reason why, after lands have been duly entered at the land office and everything has been done to entitle the party to a patent, they have by long usage confirmed by the decisions of this court been considered, before the patent is actually taken out, as subject to State taxation, in that the lands are in truth no longer public property, but have become private property.

The Supreme Court, in Cornelius v. Kassel (128 U. S., 460-461), said:

When the tract which was subject to entry was purchased and paid for it ceased to be subject to the disposal of the United States. It was not in fact their property. (Carroll v. Safford, 3 Howard. 440-460; Witherspoon v. Duncan, 4 Wallace, 210-218.) The legal title, it is true, was retained by them, but they held it as trustee for the benefit of the purchaser, and they were bound, upon proper application, to issue him patent therefor. If from inadvertence or mistake as to their rights or other cause they afterwards conveyed that title to another, the grantor, with notice, took it subject to the equitable claim of the first purchaser, who could compel its transfer to him. In all cases a court of equity would convert the second purchaser into a trustee of the true owner and compel him to convey the legal title.

From the opinions quoted the law seems to be settled by the decisions of the Supreme Court in harmony with the contention of the pending resolution. This conclusion seems, as previously stated, to have been recognized by the Department of the Interior, and has also been recognized as the settled law by the Department of Justice, for in 1881 the question was submitted by the War Department to Hon. Wayne MacVeagh, Attorney-General, as to the right of the Government to take for military purposes lands covered by an unperfected homestead of the Interior Department, the Attorney-General said:

In the opinion, which was approved by Acting Secretary Bell, of the Interior Department, the Attorney-General said:

The claim of the settler is initiated by an entry of the land. This is effected by making application at the proper land office, filing the affidavit, and paying the amount required by section 2290, Revised Statutes, and also paying the commissions as required by section 2288, Revised Statutes. It is true a certificate of entry is not then given, the certificate being under section 2291, Revised Statutes, withheld until the expiration of five years from the date of such entry, at the end of which period, upon proof of settlement and cultivation during that period and payment of the commissions remaining to be paid, it is issued; but upon the entry a right in favor of the settler would seem to attach to the land which is liable to be defeated only by failure on his part to comply with the requirements of the homestead law in regard to settlement and cultivation. This right amounts to an equitable interest in the land subject to the future performance by the settler of certain conditions (in the event of which he becomes vested with full and complete ownership), and until forfeited by failure to perform the conditions it must, I think, prevail, not only against individuals, but against the Government.

In actual practice the register and receiver of the local land office delivers to the claimant a final receipt on submission of the required proof and the payment of the statutory fees. thereupon becomes subject to taxation, and the receipt is held by the State courts sufficient evidence of legal title to sustain an action of ejectment. The final receipt, held by the courts and always regarded heretofore as the equivalent of the patent soon to follow from Washington, is accepted joyously by the man, through whose patience, industry, and self-sacrifice it has been won. The family is now secure in its well-earned home, and the future looks brighter and better. The credit formerly withheld will now be extended to enable the struggling toiler to buy a few cattle or other needed stock, to make the farm more profitable and the labor less exacting. The good wife and children may now hope to enjoy a few of the long-deferred comforts of life, so much needed in and about their humble home.

The accumulated capital of five years' patient endeavor is made available to meet many pressing needs of long standing. The sod roof on the log cabin will soon give way to shingles, and the oldest boy or girl may go away to school. This is as it used to be. But now, under the order of the honorable Secretary of the Interior, all is changed. The claimant and his two witnesses are now a trio suspected of perjury, and under that suspicion they must rest until some special agent finds time to relieve them at the expense of the Federal Government. When the relief may come no one can tell. That it will be tardy experience demonstrates, for the pernicious practice, made universal by the honorable Secretary's order of December 18, has been indulged to a considerable extent for some time. In certain cases, I am informed, the poor settlers have been held in painful suspense for years after final proof, either awaiting arrival of the special agent or waiting to hear from his report. Just picture to yourself the settler and his family on the lonely prairie or in the mountain glen. For five years he has toiled and struggled to maintain himself and those dependent upon him. On the average he has been in debt every day of that time, and his credit being poor the interest rate has been high. The land, fairly earned, is his only capital. In support of his right to a patent he produces proof sufficient to sustain a conviction of murder in the first degree. In the face of all this his right under the law is denied him, and he is sent home from the land office with his witnesses suspected of felony and commanded to await the coming of a special agent or an officer of the Interior Department to clear up the suspicion.

Honor is not confined to Cabinets, nor do special agents appointed at Washington monopolize the sentiment. Waiving denial of the title their toil has fairly won, who can measure the pain these suspected men are doomed to suffer through that chastity of honor which feels a stain like a wound?" plied charge of perjury has been affixed where a badge of honor should have been attached. To all this the torture of suspense is added, for the discredited homesteader has a long period of anxious waiting in store for him. He can not stock the farm, because he has no basis of credit. He dare not make additional improvements, because the special agent may report against him or the land be lost on a technicality. He can only wait; and I understand that some have now been waiting for four years or The pathetic victims of this iniquitous policy could not appeal in vain for sympathy to the bowels of a brute.

We are tardy in demanding to know what overwhelming public necessity cries out for the immolation of so many thousands of innocent victims on the altar of suspicion. The Congress and the country should know. Congress does not intend that its laws shall be executed in a spirit of cruelty or wrath, and the American people, inherently fair and just, need only be informed in order that the potent force of enlightened public opinion may be extended to stay the hand of injustice and oppression.

Measuring my words with care, I say that the order of the honorable Secretary of December 18 last is both unjust and oppressive; and, further still, I here aver that the records of the Interior Department do not furnish justification for the order; but, on the contrary, those records demonstrate that the order is not only unjustified, but clearly indefensible as to homestead settlers

To the record, then, let us appeal. During the last eight years Congress has, by appropriations, placed at the disposal of the honorable Secretary $1,905,161.20, or, in round numbers, $2,000,-000, for the payment of special agents and inspectors to oversee public-land entries. During the same period $4,727,282 were paid to local land officers. The agencies paid these vast sums have all been under control of the Secretary to detect fraud and evasion of the law. On an average thousands of citizens have annually contested entries at their own expense for the reward of a preference right to enter the land if successful in the contest. With the munificent fund at the disposal of the Secretary, supplemented by the interested efforts of a large body of citizens and the keen vigilance of thousands of others alert for a chance to contest, it will be conceded that all vulnerable entries have been assailed

The pending original and final homestead entries have averaged about 300,000, and the protests by special agents and the contests by individuals have approximately averaged less than 12,000 during each of the last five years.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will ask the Senator from Montana whether this order applies only to homestead entries?

Mr. CARTER. The order reads: "No patent shall issue under any law."

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Senator also state whether or not this order was made under the express direction of the President?

Mr. CARTER. I shall endeavor to reach that part of the discussion. I understand that it was agreeable to the President to have the order issued upon the misrepresentation of the facts by the Secretary of the Interior. I propose to show that the statements of the Secretary to the effect that fraud existed to any appreciable extent were statements made in direct contradiction of the facts as shown by the records of his own office.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have observed that the Senator is indulging in a very severe criticism regarding the Secretary of the Interior, and it occurred to me that if the Secretary of the Interior acted under the express direction of the President the President himself should not be exempt from criticism.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I accept it as a fact that the President of the United States has relied exclusively for his information upon the representations of his Cabinet officer. propose to show that those representations were false and that they in no considerable degree justify the order. If I succeed in showing that I think the order will be made to conform to justice and legality.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator to refer to the figures he gave a moment ago as to the number of patents per year? have the number 12,000 contested claims, but I have not the larger number given.

Mr. CARTER. I am referring in this to the total number of entries and to the numbers put in jeopardy by special agents'

Mr. WARREN. Yes. May I have the total number of entries, please?

Mr. CARTER. There were pending in the General Land Office July 1, 1906:

Original homestead entries	271, 178 13, 871
Total	285, 049
Entries protested by special agents: Original homestead entries Final homestead entries Commuted homestead entries	7, 533 995 1, 798
TotalHomestead entries contested by private individuals	10, 326 1, 668
Total contests and protests	11 994

As the 11,994 entries in controversy are not included in the 285,049, the two totals must be added, as I understand, to accurately show the whole number pending, thus making the aggregate substantially 300,000, as previously stated.

The result is that the combined efforts of a large band of wellpaid Government officers and a still larger body of interested individuals discover flaws and delinquencies in approximately 4 per cent, on an average, of all the entries pending under the homestead law at any given date.

Mr. WARREN. Let me ask how many of the 12,000 cases finally failed and patent denied. Some must have been cleared by the examination of the Office.

Mr. CARTER. The Commissioner of the General Land Office reports that 91 per cent of those challenged are passed to patent after full investigation.

Mr. WARREN. That is what I wanted to find out. Mr. CARTER. I shall reach them. This amounts to about per cent approximately, on an average, of all the entries pending.

This is far below the average defaults of merchants, who surely do not willfully fail. It is an exceptional record of faithful compliance with the law, when we consider the limited means of this brave-hearted army of honest struggling men. But it is not a surprising record, for are they not moved by high and holy motives? The builder of the home is the builder of an altar. His aims are pure and high. Fraud and falsehood are strangers to his design. But the percentage of the home-steader's delinquencies must be reduced still further by the inexorable logic of the records of the honorable Secretary's office.

On authority of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, I am happy to state that of all the homestead entries suspended on reports of special agents, approximately only 9 per cent are canceled; whereas, after full investigation, 91 per cent are approved for patent. The correct quotient resuting is therefore 9 per cent of 4 per cent of the average of pending homestead entries. This figured out so the primary pupil will understand shows that 4 per cent of 300,000 (the approximate total of average pending homestead entries) equals 12,000 (the number of entries protested and contested by special agents and individuals), and 9 per cent of 12,000 equals 1,080, that being the approximate average of entries canceled. Thus we find about 1 final homestead entry in every 300 is canceled on an agent's protest for failure to strictly comply with the law. The number of original filings canceled because of abandonment, mistake in description, relinquishments, and the like do not belong in the category of fraudulent entries, against which the Secretary's order is directed.

But why pursue the calculation beyond the ridiculous degree to which the figures, given from the Department records, reduce the honorable Secretary. He asks Congress to appropriate an extra $500,000, to be immediately available, in aid of his insane or malevolent design to discredit and persecute on an average 299,000 homestead settlers, because, forsooth, 1,000 persons offering final proof have been found to fall short of full compliance with all the requirements of the law. This large sum, mark you, is to be in addition to the current appropriation of $250,000, thereby making $750,000 to pursue the 1 delinquent out of every 300 final homestead entrymen.

As to the homestead entries, the sweeping order of the Secretary and his demand for 500,000 extra dollars to aid in its execution, discloses such ignorance of the facts and of the records of his own Department as to place the order beneath contempt, and leaves its author subject only to pity. ordinates undoubtedly know better, but they must ask for the means to comply with his order, which is their law, and in doing so they necessarily expose its absurdity.

In efficiency and fidelity the General Land Office force is not excelled by any body of public servants in the employ of the Government.

Mr. HEYBURN. Will the Senator permit me to ask a question pertinent to that point?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly. Mr. HEYBURN. Is it not true that a very large per cent of the small per cent of cancellations are for mistakes and not for fraud?

Mr. CARTER. A very large per cent. There may be mistakes in description of township or range, or the wrong subdivision of a section may be given, and therefore the Office can not issue the patent. The entry may be canceled for any one of a number of irregularities and the cancellation does not show or imply fraud except now and then.

Mr. President, I have known of these Land Office employees, the clerks at Washington, for many years, and I warrant now that the illegal disposition of public lands through forest-reserve scrip and other devices, would not have occurred during the last eight years if the Secretary of the Interior had allowed the experienced and capable men and women of the General Land Office to execute the law free from his arbitrary and stupid interferences. We would not have heard of the scandals that have occurred in connection with the lieu-land operations in the forest reserves, for I think it is a fact that the Land Office force was arbitrarily overruled and compelled against their judgment deliberately formed to give away millions of acres of the public land to the railroad corporations under that lieuland law which was never intended to apply to a railroad landgrant company at all. But that is alien to the present dis-

What have we reached from a pursuit of the record of homestead entries, followed from the view point of fraud? recapitulate: Out of every 300 entries, on the average one final entry, challenged by a special agent or otherwise, is canceled. During 1904 and 1905 the Land Office tables were elaborated to show the final and commuted homestead entries canceled. That record is so instructive that the Secretary's order must have been issued in ignorance of its story. The average final and commuted homestead entries in 1904 is shown to be 25,928, and the total cancellations of those classes of entries during that whole year reached the wonderful total of 80. This reaches the bed rack of fractions. Figure for yourself what percentage 80 is of the sum of 25,928, and you will have the fractional per cent, not of fraudulent, but of illegal and defective commuted and final homestead entries for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904.

In 1905 the commuted and final homestead entries averaged 13,590, and during that year 81 were canceled on agents' protests, charging noncompliance with the law. But the average daily pending cases does not show the total to be taken into account

In 1905 there were 38,802 homestead patents issued, whereas only 81 final entries were found to be defective or fraudulent. What percentage of 38,802 is 81? In other words, there were 38,883 final homestead entries passed to patent in 1905 less only 81, which were found fraudulent or defective. Can anyone conceive effrontery more immeasurable than that, which orders that the 38,802 honest entrymen shall be indefinitely held under odious suspicion, at the sacrifice of vital interests and wounded feelings, while a horde of Government agents make the rounds through weary years, because 81 persons have fallen short of the exacting requirements of an administration of the Interior Department, professionally honest and severely hypercritical? An appeal to reason on such a proposition would be offensive to intelligent men.

On authority of a principle as old as our civilization, it is held to be infinitely better for society that ninety and nine guilty men should go free rather than that one innocent men should be punished. This rule responds to man's innate desire to be just, and it is the outgrowth of his indescribable aversion to the punishment of innocence. Not so with the honorable Secretary of the Interior. With the records of his office showing that for sixteen years past 299 final homestead entrymen have, on the average, proved true and faithful to one delinquent found, the Secretary issues an order casting a most serious imputation upon the 299 honest men, and on the suspicion created delinquent he ordains and directs, by the order issued, that they shall suffer bitter humiliation and indefinite delay pending the arrival at their homes of some special agent, deputized to find fault and predisposed so to do.

I have heard of an agent reporting an entry for cancellation because the house in which the poor settler had sheltered his family for years was not what the agent thought it should be to show good faith. It was all the house the man could afford while striving for a better one. Yet this great Government, through a special agent, proposed to penalize the property of that struggling man. The Secretary now proposes to subject every settler to the jurisdiction of the special agents. An oath, the strongest link among men, loses its sanctity in the eyes of the Secretary when taken by a settler on the public domain or by witnesses appearing in his behalf. Why not dispense with the oath in dealing with settlers if it is only the special agent's report on which reliance is placed? But why question further? As to the final homestead entries the Secretary's order falls to the ground discredited as a gross absurdity by the incontrovertible records of his own Department. is not only illegal, but, in point of fact, utterly vicious and in-Fair inspection will demonstrate that the order has no just application to any sort of land entry, save in those rare exceptions wherein fraud is charged or suspected on reasonable grounds. The people themselves will always prove the most faithful guardians of righteousness and fair dealing. Keep the Government agencies open to receive complaints and the people will expose fraud, and then the way of the Government is clear.

The people justly place much reliance on the statements of a member of the President's Cabinet, and therefore naturally desire and confidently expect to find justification for his assigned reason for any questioned official action. Hence it might be assumed that, even conceding the demonstration of his error as to final homestead entries, warrant for his order may be found in abuses disclosed under other land laws. While it is difficult to perceive how irregularities arising in the administration of one law can fairly support obvious injustice to a large class of citizens affected by the execution of another law, we may nevertheless profit by a brief summary of the ascertained facts concerning the operations of all the land laws.

Title to public land may be acquired under the general laws commonly known as the homestead law, the timber and stone act, the desert-land law, the coal-land laws, and the mineralland laws.

Under all these laws public-land entries appear by filings or applications, which are recorded in the General Land Office. The filings of entrymen who fail to comply with the law are canceled. The vast majority of defaults and resulting cancellations occur before any attempt is made to prove up and obtain patent. Therefore it must be borne in mind in basing computations upon the figures that the aggregate number of cancella-tions in any given year only embraces a very small proportion of the final entries against which the Secretary's order of December 18 is directed.

Figure for yourself an average of 320,000 people starting out to comply with all the various laws referred to, and you can readily understand how a considerable number will fail for any one of an almost infinite variety of causes prior to the time final proof must be made under the law. Death, abandonment, change of purpose, mistake in descriptions, etc., result in perhaps 10 per cent of the original entrymen failing to apply for patent. In running the gantlet for five years it is rather singular that a greater per cent of the homestead settlers do not surrender in the presence of the obstacles that confront them from the very beginning. In the vast majority of cases such failures are brought to the attention of the Department by a letter or suggestion from some one living in the vicinity of the abandoned land.

Upon the receipt of such a communication the General Land Office directs a letter to the entryman at his last known address, citing him to show cause before the register and receiver of the local land office at a given date why his filing should not be canceled. If he fails to appear and show cause at the time and place designated, the land office proceeds without further ceremony to cancel his entry. In this way probably 90 per cent of the aggregate cancellations of original filings are made. The original filings or entries protested by the special agents of the Land Office are usually found in timber regions, where the agent is advised that the entryman may have made the filing for the purpose of cutting the timber. The entryman in such a case is liable to the Government for damages for the timber cut and liable to criminal prosecution as well, his mere original filing being no justification for timber trespass.

Under the various general laws original and final entries were pending in the General Land Office on July 1, 1906, as follows:

Original homestead entriesFinal homestead entries	271, 178 13, 871	005 010

At the same time there were pending and protested by special agents of the Government entries as follows

This seems, at first sight, quite a formidable array, making an aggregate of 14,034 entries of all kinds calling for investigation on protests filed by special agents and pending at the beginning of the current fiscal year.

Let us analyze the figures. With the 2,060 entries contested by individuals the Government is chiefly concerned only as it is under obligation to do justice between individuals contesting for title or right of possession.

The 14,034 cases protested by the Government agents embrace the fraud charges requiring full investigation. At the very outthe fraud charges requiring full investigation. At the very outset we may inquire how truly alarming are the conditions of a service exhibiting 14,034 cases involving alleged fraud, default, or irregularity in a total aggregate of 328,620 land entries. Calculation shows that this number is only a shade over 4 per cent, but the real test is not presented by the number of entries protested, but by the number actually canceled after protest and full investigation.

It will be found on close inspection and accurate analysis that less than 1 per cent of the final entries under any of the laws turn out to be fraudulent. As to the homestead law we have seen that about one-third of 1 per cent are canceled.

We have all heard much of the great frauds being perpetrated under a cloak of the timber and stone law. particular attention has been called by the Interior Department since 1901, and I submit in all candor that anyone who has read the various sensational statements made, involving charges of fraud under this law, would be led to believe that scarcely, any of the timber and stone entries are made in good faith or are entitled to consideration. I have never regarded the law as making wise provision for the disposition of timbered land, and I think it should be repealed, for the reason that it does not vield the Government an adequate return, nor does it permit of reasonable provision for the protection of the forests. Entertaining these views, I confess that I believed there was some substantial basis of fact behind the reports of frauds practiced under this law. If any credence at all is to be given to the reports of the honorable Secretary, his special attention has been directed to this class of entries for many years. As I have stated, he has had at his disposal since 1900 substantially $2,000,000 available for the investigation of fraudulent practices under all the land laws, and it is not unreasonable to suppose that he made special efforts to bring to book those seeking to defraud the Government under the timber and stone law.

I made an examination of the records with a view to ascertaining the number of timber and stone entries protested and canceled from 1890 to the close of the fiscal year 1905, and found that from 1890 to 1905, inclusive, over 30,000 timber and stone entries had been protested by special agents of the Government, and of these, after full investigation and hearing, only 498 were canceled. The cancellations prior to 1899, when the present Secretary took charge, were much greater than since his administration began; for instance, since 1899 about 17,542 timber and stone entries have been protested and but a fraction of 1 per cent were canceled. True, about 4,000 are still pending, but on the ratio established it is evident they are merely being held in limbo in the absence of facts sufficient to warrant their cancellation.

It seemed to me, in the light of all that had been said, there must be some mistake in my calculations, and under these circumstances I was as thoroughly surprised as the Senate and the country will be surprised to receive, in response to an inquiry, a letter and a tabulated statement from the General Land Office, reading as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE, Washington, D. C., January 11, 1907.

Hon. THOMAS H. CARTER, United States Senate.

United States Senate.

My Dear Senator: In compliance with your request of the 9th instant, I transmit herewith statement showing the number of timber and stone land entries made during the fiscal years ended June 30, 1900, 1901, 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905, and 1906, inclusive, the number cancied during each fiscal year, and the approximate number pending in this Office on July 1, 1906.

Very respectfully, (Signed) W. A. RICHARDS, Commissioner.

Statement of the number of timber and stone land entries made from July 1, 1899, to June 30, 1906, together with number of such entries canceled during said period and the number pending on July 1, 1906.

Fiscal year—	Entries.	Canceled.
1900	2, 385 3, 031 4, 022 12, 249 9, 435 5, 188	1 7 6 25 6 13
1906	5, 037	14

Timber and stone entries pending in the General Land Office on July 1, 1906, 4,000, approximately.

From this table we perceive that since July 1, 1899, 41.347 entries have been made under the timber and stone law, and of these only 72 entries have been canceled. In the year 1900 2,385 entries were made and only 1 entry canceled; in 1901 3,031 entries were made and only 7 entries canceled; in 1902 4,022 entries were made and only 6 were canceled; in 1903 12,249 entries were made and only 25 were canceled; in 1904 9,435 entries were made and only 6 were canceled; in 1905 5,188 entries were made and only 13 entries were canceled; in 1906 5,037 entries were made and of these only 14 were canceled.

During the last fiscal year the Secretary had at his disposal between $250,000 and $300,000 with which to employ special agents to probe this alleged seat of festering fraud and corruption, and yet during that year only 14 of the entries were found fraudulent or irregular.

During each of the preceding years, back to July 1, 1899, the Secretary has been supplied with ample funds to investigate and expose fraudulent timber and stone entries, and under the circumstances we well ask why in all that period only 72 of this class of entries were canceled on the books of the Land Office out of a total of 41,347 entries made.

These figures and facts, from the records of the Interior Department, relating to the operations of the timber and stone law, taken in connection with the vociferous charges of fraud sent forth from the Interior Department in and out of season for years, justifies us in citing the honorable Secretary to show cause why he should not be held guilty, either of willful and deliberate misrepresentation of his own records to the public, or else guilty of utter inefficiency in the administration of the law. He can not escape both charges. His Department has either with his connivance or by his direct utterances misrepresented the facts with reference to the existence of fraud, or he is convicted by the record of delinquency amounting to criminal culpability. If his representations when made were true, why did he not bring the guilty parties forward, cancel their entries, and insist upon their punishment? If he has administered his office honestly and with reasonable intelligence, then it follows that the 72 entries canceled out of over 41,000 entries presented convicts him of having deceived the public.

Much has been said about fraud in connection with coal-land So much has been said, indeed, that I figure that the readers of our current literature are warranted in the belief that there has been a mighty rush by citizens all over the publicland States to acquire title to coal lands. You would believe that unless the strong arm of the Government is interposed the millions upon millions of acres of coal lands will be taken up before breakfast to-morrow. Finding so many infirmities in reports made in other directions. I have looked up somewhat the coal-land question. I expect to give some attention to this matter a little later, but for the present I desire to incorporate a statement taken from the records of the General Land Office, which shows that since the passage of the law of 1873 only 2,878 coal entries have been made in all the vast region from the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean, and from the Canadian line to the Mexican border. In thirty-three years only 2,878 entries have been made. These entries embraced only 406,370.18 acres. The Government has received for less than half a million acres of land $6,169,854.55. This statement shows that during a period extending over thirty-three years there has been upon an average one coal entry every four days in all the vast region to which I have referred. Of all these coal entries, few have been found fraudulent. Less than one-half of 1 per cent will cover the total number. Of those challenged by the Interior Department, the Commissioner advises me that only 3 per cent are found defective, and that 97 per cent of those challenged are, after full investigation, passed to patent. The statement to which I refer is as follows:

Statement, by fiscal years, of the disposal of coal lands from July 1, 1818, to September 30, 1906, under the act of March 3, 1873 (II Stat., 607).

In recent years the coal and mineral entries have been combined in the records of the General Land Office, and it is difficult to get exact figures with reference to coal entries. An Executive order was recently issued withdrawing in Wyoming, Montana, Colorado, New Mexico, Utah, Washington, North and South Dakota, and Oregon 64,193,360 acres supposed to contain This order was made because of the apprehension that the people residing out there will, unless something is done about it, take all of the coal out of the land, burn it up, and charge the settlers too much or monopolize a commodity so easily accessible and so widely diffused! I do not wish at this time to go over the question, but I think the proposition appears semewhat grotesque in the light of the fact that in over thirty-three years less than 407,000 acres have been taken up under the coal-land laws in all the vast region embraced in the public-land States. For the lands thus taken the Government has received the highest price ever charged by any government for coal lands bearing coal of an inferior quality. The land has been sold at from $10 to $20 an acre, and the Government has received, as I have suggested, for the land sold over $6,000,000. If coal lands are entered in the future as they have been in the past in the States I have named, the lands withdrawn will all be entered in from five to six thousand years from now. That is double the time since the Christian era began and then one-half the time added beyond that.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, in amplification of what the Senator from Montana says, in the case of Wyoming, which seems to have been considerably in the limelight of late as to coal matters, taking the last eight years for example, we have had less than 20,000-in fact, about 19,000-acres of coal land taken, and the Government right now has over 16,000,000 acres of reserved alleged coal land. The engineers of the State have reported that there are still more coal lands not yet reserved, and at that ratio it will take something over eight thousand years to exhaust what is now reserved by the Government, or a matter of perhaps ten thousand years to exhaust so much as the Wyoming State engineers believe to be underlaid with coal of the public lands of Wyoming.

Mr. CARTER. To that we shall give due attention when the question is brought forward; and the discussion will prove very interesting from a statistical and from an economic point of

I will state here and now the firm conviction in my mind that it is the inherent right of the people living in a State to own the soil of the State, and that they should be permitted to acquire it. It is my belief that it will enervate this country to make it a land of landlords and tenants, however beneficent the landlord may be, or however big and strong. I believe in protecting for the American people that personal initiative which has been at the basis of our majestic progress from the beginning. In this country, by leaving the individual to pursue his way according to his best ability and genius, we have witnessed more progress than the world has ever made in a like space of time or over a like portion of the earth's surface. It is this unhampered individual initiative that has brought forth labor-saving machinery, projected and built railroads across the continent, and that has made this country what it is. I do not wish this initiative made subject to a bureaucratic government. The people can think better for themselves than the officers of any bureau with which I have ever become familiar. But that is a digression.

Now, Mr. President, passing from the coal-land laws, I call attention to the desert-land law briefly. This is the most difficult law of all to comply with, for when a man makes an entry of 320 acres at the land office he has to pay 25 cents an acre in advance to the Government, besides the customary land-office fees. He must then furnish proof of the expenditure of at least $1 an acre each year in the reclamation of the land. Finally, after the lapse of three years, he must prove that he has fully complied with the law, and, besides, pay an additional dollar per acre, thus paying the Government $1.25 per acre and expending at least $3 per acre in the reclamation of the land.

Because of defective titles and litigation in relation to them, because of inability to get the money to carry on the operation of reclaiming the land, it frequently happens that men fail in connection with this kind of a contract with the Government. But notwithstanding, Mr. President, the law has been a beneficent law, and the failures under it to make good on final proof amount to less than 1 per cent of the final entries presented. Of the original entries a large proportion, of course, are canceled because of the failure of the parties to meet all the They surrender and thereby forfeit the 25 cents per acre they have paid, because of inability to pay the balance or to furnish the money necessary to improve the land.

Mr. WARREN. But that carries no fraudulent intent,

Mr. CARTER. That carries no fraudulent intent any more than in the case of a man in the city of Washington who buys a lot and makes an advance payment on the lot, and failing to make the other payments, forfeits his lot and the money he has paid. There is no fraud about it, there is no intent to deceive, and no one is injured except the entryman. The man has simply failed to carry out the contract through inability so to do.

Mr. WARREN. He thereby has lost his right, but the Government has received this 25 cents in money and retains the land.

Mr. CARTER. Of course. There is a good deal of that. I remember in the Western States some years ago, when hard conditions were encountered in one section, it was a standing joke that the Government of the United States was engaged in a gambling business, that it bet the homesteader 160 acres of land against $18 that he could not live in the country five years, and it was said that the Government generally won. [Laughter.]

As to mineral entries, it is needless to speak at any length.

As to mineral entries, it is needless to speak at any length. In the first place, a mining claim can only embrace 20 acres. When a patent is sought on a placer claim a discovery of gold in such quantities as to justify a reasonable person in prosecuting development must be shown and the claimant is required to expend at least $500 in improvements and must pay $2.50 per acre for the ground.

In the case of a lode claim the applicant must show a discovery of a lead or lode of quartz or other rock in place, with at least one well-defined wall, and the vein matter must disclose the presence of gold, silver, cinnabar, or other valuable metal. At least $500 worth of work must be done before patent can be obtained, and the character of the improvements must be certified to by a deputy mineral surveyor appointed under authority of the United States to survey the claim. The claimant must likewise pay the Government $5 per acre for the land when his application for patent is presented. The utmost care is taken with reference to advertising applications for patent by publishing notice in a newspaper published nearest the land and also by posting notice and plat on the claim. Where an issue arises between two claimants, adverse is filed in the land office, and thereafter suit must be commenced in a court of competent jurisdiction to settle the question of title, the judgment of the court being binding upon the Government as to the rights of the contesting parties.

In a statement of protests by Government agents furnished me by the Land Office, covering the years from 1890 to 1905, inclusive, I find that but 631 protests have been filed and that but a very trifling fraction of the total of all applications were canceled.

The wisdom of our mineral-land laws may be judged by the enormous addition to the nation's wealth contributed by the miners who have explored, located, and developed mines under the laws and the local rules and regulations since 1848. Under the laws, rules, and regulations we see standing to the credit of the prospectors and the miners a superb total of seven billion dollars extorted from the earth and added to the nation's wealth in gold, silver, copper, and lead within nine and forty years

To those who favor leasing and thus destroying the incentive to individual initiative these figures may well be cited for comparison with results attained under any system of governmental supervision and royalty since the world began.

The Secretary of the Interior proposes to send a special agent of the Land Office or of his Department forth to ascertain before patent issues whether a given mining claim sought to be patented is sufficiently promising to warrant the holding thereof as a mineral claim. He can not have in mind the mere ascertainment of the fact of the expenditure of the required $500 previous to patent, because an officer of the United States Government—a deputy mineral surveyor—must have certified to such expenditure before the application is presented to the Secretary. The special agent of the Land Office or of the Secretary's office is to determine the value of a mine—is to decide questions upon which learned experts disagree. To decide a question which can only be decided by an infinite amount of human toil, supplemented by the application of scientific principles in the treatment of ores and the extraction thereof from the ground.

Think of Billy Botts, special agent of the Interior Department, passing judgment upon the value of a mine, or the soundness of a man's judgment who has given the highest possible evidence of good faith by the investment of his toil and his means in the development work. It is exasperating to be called upon to argue such an absurd proposition.

In the case of my colleague [Mr. Clark] I believe a number of the most learned experts in the United States pronounced a certain mining property in Arizona not worth the cost of development. My colleague's judgment was to the contrary, and, pursuing his own judgment, he prosecuted development there to the extent of a moderate fortune and brought forth one of the greatest copper mines on the face of this earth. Now, before you issue a patent will you send down an agent of the Land Office to that Arizona country to look over mines about which men who are well informed disagree so radically? I hope that there is no intention of that kind, and I understand that a modification of this order has been made to avoid that ridiculous conclusion.

Mr. President, to sum the whole matter up finally, it will appear from a critical analysis of the figures and the facts, that not to exceed one-half of 1 per cent of the final homestead entries, less than 1 per cent of the final desert-land entries, less than one-half of 1 per cent of the final timber and stone entries, and less than 1 per cent of the final coal entries are found to be fraudulent, and the percentage of mineral entries tainted with fraud is small indeed. Taking the whole aggregate of percentage together and figuring out from these percentages the average we will find that less than one final entry of public land out of every hundred has been found in all the years to be subject to cancellation on account of fraud, default, or delinquency of any kind. As to the homestead settlers, there is but 1 delinquent substantially in every 300 final entrymen.

In the face of this showing from the records of the Interior Department an order is issued denying to all final entrymen a right which the Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly recognized and which the Department itself has not heretofore gainsaid. From the day the final entry is made the right of local taxation attaches to the land under the decisions of the Supreme Court; and yet, sir, while bearing the burden of taxation, the 99 blameless men out of 100 in most cases and the 299 men out of 300 in the homestead cases must be denied complete evidence of legal title to their land until some agent of the Land Office or agent of the Interior Department can personally inspect the premises in the many, many thousands of cases.

Before the issuance of this order of December 18 conditions were hard enough, particularly for the homestead settlers. Suspected at every turn in the road of evil design, harassed by special agents and exasperating requirements of the Interior Department, it is not surprising that two honest home seekers left the United States to locate in Canada during the year 1906 to one that filed a homestead entry on the public domain of the United States.

I should like to be possessed of time to go over this strange story of the driving of our own people out of our own country and into the far North, to face a more inclement climate, because of the harsh rules of our own Government in enforcing laws as they never were enforced or sought to be enforced before.

I have here a pamphlet issued by the direction of the minister of the interior at Ottawa, Canada, which proceeds to set forth the happy conditions under which Americans may proceed to the Dominion and there acquire homestead rights and privileges under far better conditions than obtain in the United States. With the permission of the Senate, I will ask to insert at the conclusion of my remarks the homestead rules and regulations of the Canadian government, but in passing will merely say that I am informed that 59,000 Americans filed claims to land in Canada last year in the northwest country, whereas in all our own broad domain only about 25,000 homestead claims were filed. In other words, we are driving the finished product of our citizenship out over the northern border, while we are encouraging the raw material to come through the gates of Castle Garden.

Mr. President, in 1896 only forty-nine Americans—mark the number—forty-nine Americans crossed the Canadian line to settle on public lands.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. When was that?

Mr. CARTER. In 1896. In 1906 over 105,000 of as good people as Iowa, Minnesota, North Dakota, Montana, or any part of our country can produce sadly passed from under the flag of the United States and went over across the border and cast their lot in the Dominion of Canada.

We have as good a climate; we have as good soil; we think we have a better Government; we have as fair laws, although more exacting, but we have an administration of those laws inspired by suspicion, which makes their execution the cruelest administration of land laws that has been known in this or any other country.

I will not only insert in my remarks, with the permission of the Senate, the Canadian homestead laws and regulations, but I will likewise insert the data furnished me by the Land Office, on request, upon which the statements of percentages I have made are based. I will not undertake to read at any length from these statements, because I have already trespassed too long on the time of the Senate; but I think the original data may be of some value if left available to those desiring to inquire into the correctness of the statements made.

Where fraud is charged or evidence of fraud exists, the present machinery is ample to detect, investigate, prosecute, and puesh the guilty. Where fraud is not charged and the existence thereof is not suggested by any fact or circumstance, the men who enter public lands are entitled to the same fair and just treatment accorded to all other citizens engaged in legitimate pursuits. They are entitled to the full benefit of that ancient and beneficent rule of law which holds that all things are presumed to be done legitimately until the contrary is proved and to the further well-established principle that dishonesty is not to be presumed. They are entitled to their rights under the law, and no officer is authorized to issue any order denying or abridg-

To the band of Pharisees who base their claims to personal honesty and public attention on the merciless slandering of nonesty and public attention on the merciless slandering of their neighbors it is useless to submit any question in the expectation of obtaining fair and impartial treatment. He who would establish his own reputation for virtue by pointing to the alleged lack of that quality in others ere long becomes the victim of a confirmed habit of dissimulation. Such an individual will meet law and facts with opprobrious epithets while attempting the local confirmed habit of the proportion of the local confirmed habit. ing to smother the logic of figures beneath an avalanche of innuendo and falsehood. From that class of persons the good peo-ple settling the West need expect neither justice, comfort, nor support, but only additional insult and injury.

To the honorable writers and the decent press of the country special appeal is unnecessary. The law, the facts, and the fig-ures tell the plain story of the rights and the wrongs of the thousands upon thousands of honest, care-encumbered men and women whose cause I earnestly, but all too feebly, attempt to

I have been with and of these people and witnessed them felling the trees and grubbing the stumps on the Ohio River bottom, I will say to the Senator from Ohio. I was with this band of wanderers when they turned the sod of Illinois and drained the swamps of that great State. I saw them working to reclaim from a condition of nature the great, grand, rolling prairies of Iowa, and I am with them and of them still on the table-lands of the Rocky Mountains. I know of their sense of honor, probity of character, and integrity of purpose. They are an honest people, and it calls forth every particle of indignation in my nature to hear any officer of this Government in a seat of power traducing them and charging them with wholesale perjury and fraud, in defiance of law and the plain records of his own office. I have heard of constituencies voting lack of confidence in the government, and before that lack of confidence governments have fallen; but I have never lack of confidence and the search of the s heard before of a government announcing a lack of confidence in the whole people of numerous States and Territories. And yet that is the peculiar condition in which we of the West find ourselves to-day.

It may be inquired why we bring this matter into the Senate? Because an appropriation of $500,000 is called for to aid in carrying forward an iniquitous policy, not supported by any facts, based only upon suspicion, and that suspicion without founda-I do not wish to see the legislative department of the Government tainted with any kind of participation in this wholesale questioning of the integrity and veracity of the people living beyond the Mississippi.

Mr. President, further still, while asking the legislative department of the Government to withhold its support from this policy, I do hope that having here stated the facts and challenged the records for their support, we may find elsewhere and hereafter a relaxation of these odious rules and a restoration of that confidence in the home builders of the West which they have enjoyed and justified for more than a century.

APPENDIX No. 1.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE, Washington, D. C., January 11, 1907.

Hon. THOMAS H. CARTER, United States Senate.

United States Senate.

My Dear Senator: In reply to your request of the 8th instant, I transmit herewith statements showing the entries of public lands pending in this Office, etc., at the close of the fiscal year ended June 30, 1890, and succeeding fiscal years to and including that ended June 30, 1905. A similar report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1906, was furnished by letter of January 5, 1906.

These statements were compiled from the annual reports. The number of "Contests brought by individuals" and "Entries canceled" during each fiscal year could not be segregated into the different classes of entries, because the annual reports do not so state them. The "Entries canceled" comprise those canceled as the result of contests by individuals and for fallure to make final proof within the prescribed statutory period, relinquishments, abandonment, etc.

The statement of entries, etc., protested by special agents and pending or canceled, are in addition to the other statements of entries pending and canceled.

Very respectfully,

W. A. RICHARDS, Commissioner.

The total of annual cancellations here shown are made up chiefly of original entries or mere filings, to which the Secretary's order does not apply, as only final entrymen are applicants for patents. This table is introduced to supply data for efficiency comparisons merely.  By a comparison of the eight years following the advent of the present Secretary upon the scene with the eight years immediately preceding we may determine, by the number of public-land entries of all kinds canceled, something of the much-advertised efficiency and vigilance of the present head of the Department, as compared with the average work of his four predecessors. From 1890 to 1897, inclusive, the average annual cancellation of all classes of entries was 31,058, whereas the average annual cancellations from 1898 to 1905, inclusive, is shown by the record to be 29,834. The average number of entries canceled annually for the whole period of sixteen years is 30,445.  The total number of all classes of entries shown at the close of each fiscal year has varied somewhat during the sixteen-year period, but not to a degree sufficient to materially affect the average of cancellations annually, as compared with the total number of entries. more telling results, if the number of entries canceled by the Department is to be accepted as evidence of vigilance and efficiency in the administration of the land laws. The present Secretary's record for the last eight years shows an annual drop below the line of efficiency aggregating more than 1,000 entries annually, as compared with the cancellations during the preceding eight years. ## CHANGES IN DISTRICT STREET-RAILWAY TRACKS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 6147) authorizing changes in certain street-railway tracks within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, be now considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, first, I ought to ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has heretofore been read as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr GALLINGER. I offer a substitute for the bill, which I ask to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire roposes an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill, which will be read.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from New Hampshire kindly indicate to the Senate to what the bill relates?

Mr. GALLINGER. It provides for the extension of the street railway tracks to the Union Station, and the substitute which I have offered will be read.

The Secretary read the proposed substitute, as follows:

That the City and Suburban Railway of Washington be, and it hereby is, authorized and required to construct a double-track extension of its lines from New Jersey avenue and G street NW. northeastwardly through reservation 77 to existing tracks along G street to North Capitol street, thence southwardly to Massachusetts avenue, thence eastwardly along Massachusetts avenue with such deviation as may be necessary to bring the tracks immediately in front of and adjacent to the main entrance to the Union Station to junctions with the existing tracks at Third and D streets NE, and at the northwest corner of Stanton square.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it will be remembered that on two former occasions when this bill has been called up for consideration certain Senators made objection to it. The Senator from Montana [Mr. Cabtes] insisted that there ought to be a provision in the bill for a transfer arrangement between the railroad company and the herdic line at Fifteenth and H streets. That has been cured by the insertion of a provision which is satisfactory to the Senator from Montana. So there is no further objection on that point.

Mr. SPOONER. That has been approved by the President? Mr. GALLINGER. Probably so. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter] objected to the provision that contemplated a line from Florida avenue and Seventh street down New Jersey avenue to the Union Station, and the property owners and those who occupy houses on that avenue, I think mistakenly, signed a large petition by way of protest. That has been eliminated.

I desire to say that in the substitute I have offered the least possible trackage construction has been provided for, and think it is well enough for me to say that the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale], who is greatly interested in all these projects, and is always helpful, has gone over the substitute with great particularity and approves of it.

Mr. President, I wish very briefly to explain precisely what the proposed substitute does. It provides the legislation, and no more, which is absolutely necessary to give the public comfortable access to the Union Station, now nearing completion and soon to be occupied and used.

By the first section of the substitute the City and Suburban Railway is required to extend its line from New Jersey avenue and G street along G street and North Capitol street past the Union Station to junctions with existing lines at Third and D streets NE. and at Stanton Square, thus giving the business and shopping districts direct communication with the station. This construction means in all about 4,300 feet of single track, the length of double track being less than seven city blocks.

Section 2 requires the Washington Railway and Electric Company to extend its line from Delaware avenue and C street NE. along Delaware avenue to the station front, connecting with the City and Suburban line authorized in the preceding section. This extension of 1,270 feet of single track will give a direct line to and from the Capitol, a little more than three blocks distant.

The amendment requiring transfers between the Washington Railway and Electric Company and the Metropolitan Coach Company explains itself, and is satisfactory to those who have advocated that arrangement.

Section 3 gives the Capital Traction Company rights on Delaware avenue from C street to the plaza and the station, so that the cars running on Pennsylvania avenue may have an absolutely necessary connection. This company's construction on the plaza means 570 feet of single track. Furthermore we provide facilities for the Capital Traction Company's passengers from the northern and northwestern portions of the city by requiring a deflection eastward at Seventh and K streets NW., continuing on K street to North Capitol street, and thence over the tracks of the City and Suburban Railway to the station plaza. The total length of these connections is 3,604 singletrack feet, about seven blocks, and this eliminates the proposed occupancy of New Jersey avenue by railroad tracks, to which objection has been made.

Section 4 is essential and self-explanatory. Section 5 sets the time limit; in some instances unnecessary, because the public demands and the natural desire of the companies to do business will hasten construction and operation, so that the margin allowed, while much shorter than is common in legislation, will surely be ample.

Section 6 is a safeguard of existing law, except in the proviso as to the number and location of tracks immediately in front of the main entrance to the station. The proviso is wholly in the interest of the traveling millions who will of necessity use the street cars.

Section 7 is essential and self-explanatory.

Section 8 gives the District Commissioners authority to remove an obstruction which would be a dangerous obstacle to traffic. It is deemed desirable by a number of Senators that the Massachusetts avenue western approach to the station be kept as clear as possible of car tracks and of all highway features likely to interfere with general traffic, which is accomplished.

The remaining sections place upon the railway companies whatever burdens may be by reason of the widening of road-ways or changes of street grades, and give to the District Commissioners the necessary authority to supervise and approve all

From the measure submitted everything has been eliminated as to which there could possibly be any controversy, leaving for future consideration other extensions deemed by some to be desirable. The railroad companies are not urging this measure, but the public interests require it, and the railroads can be depended upon to proceed energetically with construction.

The immediate necessity for haste is, however, with us and not with them. I have been informed that everything that can be done in advance of legislation has been done. Until there is a governing statute they can not order necessary steel, for until the new lines are authorized-by law and by the District Commissioners-no one knows how much of straight track and how much of curves, switches, crossings, crossovers, and other "special work" will be needed. The number of mills turning out this "special work" is very small—not more than three or four in the whole country-and these assert, so I am informed, that they can not guarantee delivery in less than three or four months. Allowing thirty days for construction and the time necessary for the preliminary engineering upon which all measurements and orders must be based, we can not, if this bill is finally approved within a week, expect these lines to be in use much before December 1 of this year. Yet the Union Station In fact. will be doing more or less business within four months. the Baltimore and Ohio is now anxious to get in so that the deep and broad valley now occupied by its tracks may be filled and become, as it will, a large and important section of the plaza and its western and southwestern approaches.

Anyone can therefore see that however expeditious we may be in the matter of legislation, the traveling public must inevitably suffer great inconvenience for a considerable period. Some of us have seen it in sessions past and have striven to prevent such a condition. Prevention is now impossible, but by prompt action we can at least prevent the condition from becoming intolerable.

In view of these facts, I trust that amendments will not be pressed to the bill and that it may be at once passed by the Senate so that the other House may have an early opportunity to consider it.

With this brief statement, Mr. President, I submit the matter to the candid consideration of the Senate.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add at the end of section 3 the following:

Also a double-track extension of its lines, beginning at Florida avenue and Seventh street NW., southeasterly along Florida avenue to its intersection with east Eighth street, thence in a southerly direction along east Eighth street to its intersection with the said company's tracks at Pennsylvania avenue SE., also a double-track extension beginning at the intersection of Eighth and F streets NE, westwardly on said F street to the Union Station, there to connect by such route as may be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia with the double-track loop hereinbefore mentioned.

Mr. Breeidont thore is your sovieus about the control of the cont

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, there is very serious objection to the amendment to the substitute.

Mr. BURKETT. Then I will explain it.
Mr. GALLINGER. I will give way to the Senator if he desires to make an explanation.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I will not take much time myself in making a statement, but I desire to have one or two. letters read in connection with this matter.

The amendment is intended to take care of the great northeast section of the city which to-day is very inadequately supplied with street-car facilities. Anyone at all familiar with all the great northeast section of the city knows that it is practically impossible to reach that section of the city by street car. The matter of getting this very identical street car line as outlined in the amendment has been before Congress a great many years. To-day there is practically no objection to the amendment.

The citizens, I may say, so far as I can learn, are unanimously for it. The street car company, which it is provided shall build the line, has agreed to build it. It is ready to build it. The trouble comes, as I understand, and we may as well be plain about it, from the fact that the other street car company does not want this street car company to get into that section of the city. That is the only objection, and if it were not for that, as I think the chairman of the committee will agree, the amendment would go on without any objection.

The only reason why it was not put on is that it would raise some controversy on the part of the other street car company by their filing objections to it, and that sort of thing, and possibly delay the measure. But it occurs to me that the matter might just as well be ironed out now as at any other time. Here is a matter that has been pending a long time, and there are thousands of people in that section of the city who are walking and riding in herdics and buggies and in every other way to down into town, with no street car service, practically speaking. We are providing now for certain street car extensions by this very company, and it occurs to me that the Northeast Citizens' Association is right in its demands that now is the time when this extension should be authorized.

I will say that Doctor Gallaudet, of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, is very anxious about it, and he has written a letter which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE COLUMBIA INSTITUTION FOR THE DEAF AND DUMB, KENDALL GREEN,
Washington, D. C., January 28, 1997.

Hon. ELMER J. BURKETT, United States Senate.

United States Senate.

Dear Sir: The officers, students, and employees of this institution have learned with great interest of the amendment which you have proposed in the Senate to Senate bill 6147, this amendment being understood to provide for the construction of a street railway along Florida avenue, passing in front of the grounds of this institution.

The residents of Kendail Green have been hoping for several years that their facilities for reaching the city by street cars might be improved. No street railway passes nearer to Kendail Green than four squares, and in unpleasant weather or in the heat of summer it is no small trial to be compelled to walk the distance of these squares in order to secure a ride in a street car. The proposed line will be most acceptable to the residents of Kendail Green and they earnestly hope that Congress will take action favorably upon this measure at its present session.

Very respectfully, yours,

E. M. Gallaudet, President.

Mr. BURKETT, Mr. President I should like to say hefere.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I should like to say before I have read the statement which I hold in my hand, as the question has been asked me privately, that the amendment contem-plates the extension of the street car tracks that come down Florida avenue as far as Seventh street and then down Seventh street to Pennsylvania avenue. The amendment provides that they shall extend the tracks along Boundary street, or Florida avenue, over as far as Eighth street NE., then come down Eighth street to Pennsylvania avenue SE., with spur from Eighth street up to the new Union Station, giving the whole northeast section a direct line to the Union Station.

I now ask the Secretary to read a statement which was filed here with reference to this matter, covering the ground quite conclusively.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested, if there is no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

[Memorial in support of the amendment to Senate bill No. 6147, entitled "A bill authorizing changes in certain street railway tracks within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."]

About ten years ago the residants in the vicinity of Florida avenue east of Seventh street NW. began to urge the extension of the U street line easterly along Florida avenue to North Capitol street, as provided in its charter. (Act of Apr. 30, 1892, 27 Stat. L., 23.) As this section of the city was at that time sparsely settled the street car company did not build east of Seventh street, except a short spur used for switching purposes.

During the winter of 1897 a petition signed by about 1,000 persons was presented to the railway company asking for the construction of the road as far east as North Capitol street, but as the authority had lapsed by nonuser, although the company was willing to construct the road, the Commissioners of the District declared they were without authority to grant the permit for such construction. During December, 1898, the company's power house at Fourteenth and E streets NW. was destroyed by fire. Since then the company has felt unable until very recently to build this extension.

In October, 1905, the company decided that if authority was obtained for the work it would build the extension along Florida avenue and Eighth street to Pennsylvania avenue SE, and so complete a crosstown car line which had been so earnestly urged for many years by the various citizens' organizations of the District. 'As soon as this decision became known petitions to Congress were circulated along Florida avenue and vicinity, and within a single week about 4,000 persons, patrons of street cars, signed the petitions asking Congress to authorize the desired extension. The petitions were signed by the residents on Florida avenue from Seventh street NW. to Kendall Green, at Eighth and Florida avenue from Seventh street NW. to Kendall Green, at Eighth and Florida avenue from Seventh street

PRESENT STATUS.

Senate bill 43, which was introduced at the request of the Capital Traction Company, contained a provision for the extension desired by the petitioners and the writers of the letters referred to. This bill was reported favorably, but some amendments relating to taxation were added which, after discussion, caused the bill to be recommitted by the Senate. Meanwhile Senate bill 6147 was introduced by Senator Gallinger, which contained the street car extension formerly reported favorably by the committee, with the exception of the one along Florida avenue and Eighth street. This bill was reported back to the Senate in lieu of the one previously reported, and Senator Hanserough at once offered several amendments to it, including the one providing for the Capital Traction extension herein referred to, with an extension along New Jersey avenue. The amendment now offered relates only to the extension along Florida avenue and leaves New Jersey avenue undisturbed.

Congress should authorize the extension of street car tracks along Florida avenue and Eighth street to Pennsylvania avenue SE., for the following reasons:

Congress should authorize the extension of street car tracks along Florida avenue and Eighth street to Pennsylvania avenue SE., for the following reasons:

1. It will afford the patrons of the Capital Traction Company for one fare to approach the great terminal freight station and freight yards lying immediately north of Florida avenue NE., which can not be reached by this company without such extension.

2. It will afford convenient facilities for one fare to thousands of pupils residing in the territory served by the Capital Traction Company for reaching the Armstrong Manual Training High School, at Second and P streets NW., who can not now reach there without paying two car fares or being subjected to great exposure during inclement weather.

3. It will afford convenient facilities for one fare to thousands of pupils residing in the territory served by the Washington Railway and Electric Company for reaching the McKinley Manual Training and Central High schools without the payment of two fares or being subjected to exposure during inclement weather.

As the Central and the McKinley and Armstrong Manual Training High schools include about two-thirds of all high school students in the District not in the Business High School (which both the car lines now reach), the importance of reasons two and three will be at once seen.

4. It will afford reasonably direct and convenient street-car facilities for one fare for all navy-yard employees residing east of Seventh street and north of Pennsylvania avenue.

5. It will afford reasonably direct and convenient street-car facilities for one fare for fully one-third of the residents of Washington to reach for one fare for fully one-third of the residents of Washington to reach for one fare for fully one-third of the residents of Washington to reach for one fare for fully one-third of the residents of Washington to reach for one fare for fully one-third of the residents of Washington to reach for one fare for fully one-third of the residents of Washington to reach the Glenwood, Prospect Hill, St. Mary's, and Mount Olivet cemeteries, which many thousands are obliged to visit every year.

6. It will afford direct and convenient street-car facilities for Kendall Green, the only institution of its kind in the United States, with its large number of pupils and instructors, and many visitors, who are always embarrassed by the present lack of facilities to reach this famous Government institution.

7. It will afford the first and only real cross-town street-cay line in the city, and the only north and south line east of the Capitol and north of Pennsylvania avenue. It is simply an extension of the same track in northeast Washington of the present north and south line in southeast Washington.

8. It will afford great convenience to from 35,000 to 50,000 people who must travel over three sides of a square to reach their destination on the other side of it. This applies with great force to persons residing in either north or east Washington who may wish to reach other places in those parts of the city. For example: A person residing on Twelfth, near H street NE, in order to reach any point on Twelfth street near East Capitol must travel west, then south to the East Capitol line, and then east to Twelfth street again, and pay two fares to reach his destination, while if physically able he can walk down Twelfth street in one-third of the time required to travel the three sides of the square. The same is true in going from any point in north Washington as, say, Park road to Eleventh street and Columbia road. Many other illustrations might be given for different parts of the city usually requiring two car fares.

9. This extension is asked for by every citizens' organization through whose territory it passes, and has been approved by the District Commissioners. It was also approved some years ago by the late Senator McMillan.

10. More than 95 per cent of the residents on Florida avenue along

10. More than 95 per cent of the residents on Florida avenue along the proposed route have signed the petition asking for it. Consequently there is practically no opposition to it from residents along the line, as there has been for other proposed routes for a cross-town

11. Florida avenue is especially adapted for a cross-town line, by both geographical location and by its width, and is practically the only street that is so adapted.

12. The Washington Railway and Electric Company is opposing this grant, but has never offered to build a cross-town line in this vicinity. It now proposes a bus line as a substitute, which can in no sense be deemed commensurate with this great public demand, and which could have been put on without legislation at any time that suited the management, but has never been done.

13. This extension to North Capitol street provides a direct route for the Capital Traction Company to the Union Passenger Station by passing over the present tracks on North Capitol street, and thus will leave New Jersey avenue entirely undisturbed as a driveway, if Congress so desires.

gress so desires.

14. We are authorized to say that the Capital Traction Company is ready now to build this extension if empowered to do so by Congress. CONCLUSION.

As this extension will meet so great a public demand, as it has been indorsed by every citizens' organization affected by it, and as the company is ready to build it, why should it not be immediately authorized? This is the question now before Congress. We trust a law will be passed this session providing for the extension along Florida avenue and Eighth street, as above described, and thus meet the needs as well as the wishes of such a large number of the residents of and taxpayers in the District of Columbia.

Respectfully submitted,

A. R. Servey.

President North Capitol and Eckington Citizens' Association,
W. J. Hughes,
Vice-President North Capitol and Eckington Citizens' Association.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I had not before seen the document that has been read-Senate Document No. 190-and so am unable to determine the accuracy of the various statements that are made in it. My attention was called to one statement as it was being read, which certainly is not true so far as I am in possession of any information, and that is that the Washington Railway and Electric Company is opposing this grant. No man connected with that company has ever suggested to me anything concerning this proposed legislation.

Mr. President, the bill which is now under consideration has been before the Senate for a long time—since last June—and several attempts have been made to pass it, the chief objection being on the part of certain Senators that we were proposing extensions which were unnecessary because of their undue length. This amendment contemplates the construction of practically a new line of railway in the District of Columbia, and it seems to me a singular circumstance that the Senator from Nebraska, who is a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, has not during the present Congress offered a bill which would in proper course of time come to that committee and receive the consideration of the committee.

Mr. BURKETT. Does the Senator want an answer? If so, will give it to him.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure. Mr. BURKETT. I did not get the permission of the chairman of the committee until last week to introduce this amend-

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, Mr. President, no member of that committee ever gets the permission of the chairman to do anything. The Senator has the same right the chairman has to offer a bill and send it to the committee. If he had done so, it would have been sent to the Commissioners, and I have no doubt if it had come back the Senator himself would have been made chairman of a subcommittee, if he desired it, to give it consideration.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say in seriousness that the matter was not presented to me until last week. I then carried it to the chairman of the committee, for whom every member of the committee has great respect, and asked permission, and obtained it from the committee at our last meeting, to offer it here. I did not want to do anything, I will say to the chairman, as he knows, without acting in harmony with his committee. matter was not brought to my attention until last week.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no doubt, and I will be entirely frank about this matter, that there ought to be some extension through that territory; there is need of it; but whether or not this amendment is a wise amendment I am utterly unable to say. It does this: It makes an extension from Seventh and Florida avenue NW. to east Eighth street and then to Pennsylvania avenue SE. of 3 miles and 360 feet of railroad track. It makes an extension on F street, a double track, on a street only 34 feet wide, of 2,800 feet, or over half a mile. So, if this amendment is adopted, on a bill which proposes to extend the tracks of existing street railways to the Union Station, we are going to charter the construction of 4 miles of street railway in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULLOM. In addition?

Mr. GALLINGER. In addition. It is not wise legislation on this bill. It never has had the consideration of the chairman of the committee, certainly, and, I think, not of many members of the committee, before.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly. Mr. HANSBROUGH. Practically this same amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska was contained in a bill which I had the honor to report to this body last winter. It was put into that bill after the most careful consideration and upon the petition of some 5,000 people in that section of the city.

I had the honor at that time to be chairman of the subcommittee on street railroads, and I gave it fullest consideration and so did other members of the subcommittee. The amendment, or what is offered now as an amendment, was placed in the bill that was reported out of the full committee at last winter's session of the Senate.

So, Mr. President, there has been notice of this amendment, and it has been before this body heretofore, and also before the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator is right, and he is wrong. The Senator knows the history of that proposed legislation, and I am not going to repeat it. It was reported by a majority of 1 when only half of the committee was present, and when there was an entire misunderstanding as to the nature of the bill.

Now, I say for myself, and I assume the responsibility and am willing to take it, that I have never been over a foot of this ground. I do not know whether these streets are proper streets on which to construct a street railway or not. Neither have I seen the numerous petitions the Senator from North Dakota speaks of. He may have them in his committee room; I have never seen them.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. They came through the Senate to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and were referred by that committee, I assume by the chairman of the committee, to the subcommittee on street railroads.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I will take the responsibility of saying that I should like to see those 5,000 names to those petitions.

But I want to emphasize the fact that here it is proposed to construct 4 miles of new street railway in the District of Columbia on a bill that proposes to construct, I think, less than half a mile to get to the Union Station. Upon that statement I am ready to submit the matter to the Senate. If the Senate thinks this is a wise thing to do, of course the chairman of the committee will have to submit. But I think it is utterly unwise and that it ought not to be done. If a bill shall be offered in the Senate at the next session (it could not of course receive consideration in the few days that remain of this session) and is sent to the Committee on the District of Columbia proposing to construct a railway in the northeast section of the city, I will give my personal guaranty that it will have every proper consideration, and that if it is thought to be a wise measure we will then have this extension provided for.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I regret that we have not fuller information of this subject. It is one in which I have no interest whatever except to respond to a request made to me by the Northeast Washington Citizens' Association through their president, Mr. Evan H. Tucker. I am not familiar with the subject myself, and had I received his letter earlier than this morning I would have taken occasion better to inform myself.

It seems, however, from what has been stated in the debate, that this matter has been for two sessions before Congress and that the members of the committee are fully able to enlighten the Senate about it. The chairman, who is generally exceedingly attentive to all business in his hands, to whom I have no sort of antagonism whatever, says he has not gone over the ground and does not know about it. The only opportunity for people who live a little aside from the main stream of things to get legislation is on occasions like this, when pertinent matters are being considered, or at least it is their best opportunity to get some attention.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly. Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator suggests that this has been before Congress for two years. My impression is, and I think I am absolutely correct, that no bill has ever been offered in the Senate which proposed to build this extension.

Mr. DANIEL. I understood the Senator from North Dakota to say it was reported to the Senate as an amendment to a bill by the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was.

Mr. DANIEL. It could not have been reported by the committee without the committee considering it, and it was, therefore, a matter duly submitted for the consideration of the committee, duly considered, and duly commended to this body, according to the statement of the Senator from North Dakota, now concurred in by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. DANIEL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will engage to the Senator that that

Mr. GALLINGER. I will suggest to the Senator that that bill, immediately after being reported, was recommitted to the committee by a very large vote of the Senate.

Mr. DANIEL. Then the committee has had since the recommittal, when asked by the Senate to reconsider it, up to the present time. It has had two opportunities to consider this matter and report the pros and cons. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota for a question.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to say that two bills were referred to the subcommittee on street railroads at the last session of the Senate, which were, I think, introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire himself. I know, of course, that the Senator can not keep track of all those things, because he is a very busy Senator-one of the busiest Senators in this body-but, if I am not mistaken, one of those bills contained the provision which is now under discussion. It was not put in the bill as an amendment, according to my recollection. I think it was contained in one of the bills that was introduced in this body. I do not recall whether the Senator from New Hampshire introduced it or not, but I am quite sure that it came to the subcommittee in that form.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say, if the Senator from Virginia will permit me-

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ascertain the fact about that. I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The fact can be ascertained. I may be wrong about it, but I think I am right.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask that the letter which I have in my hand may be read as a part of my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

NORTHEAST WASHINGTON CITIZENS' ASSOCIATION, Washington, D. C., January 29, 1967.

Hon. JOHN W. DANIEL.

Hon. John W. Daniel.

Dear Senator: In behalf of the people who I represent, who have been striving for fifteen years to secure legislation for a cross-town street-car line, I respectfully solicit your support for the inclosed amendment. The eastern section of the city, with a population of 75,000, has no north-and-south line whatever, while the western section has six such lines. The thousands of employees of the navy-yard are unable to ride to the northeast section without first going uptown and then paying another fare to go northeast.

Please pardon me for making this request, but as we citizens of the District have no voice in our government we are compelled to appeal to our lawmakers for needed legislation.

Yours, very truly,

Evan H. Tucker,

EVAN H. TUCKER, President Northeast Washington Citizens' Association.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I will only observe that a letter of that character, coming from so large and representative a body, appealing to such just considerations, is entitled to the fair and full consideration of this body when it passes upon this matter. I do not make any criticism of the committee. know what immense business they have before them; I make no unpleasant animadversion whatsoever; but the fact is that this matter has not been sufficiently considered to fully enlighten our minds upon this subject.

Mr. BURKETT, Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask the Senator in just what particular he now wants information. There is not any question about this being a proper route, I will say, for the street car traffic. We know exactly the only objection there is to it and we know exactly who wants it. It has been before the committee, and after consideration by the subcommittee it was recommended to the full committee, and then by the committee recommended to this body, when there was some discussion on account of a taxation clause. I will say, and I think the chairman will bear me out in it, there was considerable time spent on the discussion of a provision for taxing the railroads, which was an amendment added to it, and after considerable discussion the chairman of the committee moved to recommit the bill and it went back. As I understood at that time, for nothing was said particularly about the other provision, it went back altogether for further investigation upon the taxation amendment proposed to the bill. After it went back to the committee last June this bill was introduced as a substitute for the old original Senate bill 43, which contained this provision and which had been considered by the subcommittee and the committee. When the new bill was introduced it was referred to another subcommittee, I think, or at least it was brought before the committee by the chairman, and upon fair consideration they recommended that as a substitute. There is no question, I think, about this bill.

Mr. DANIEL. The committee recommended what as a substitute?

Mr. BURKETT. They recommended the bill which is now before us as a substitute.

Mr. DANIEL. Omitting the amendment? Mr. BURKETT. Omitting the amendment. I may say to the Senator that the matter is entirely frank and fair between us, the chairman taking the position that it was better not to encumber this bill with that kind of an amendment. He said here a moment ago that it is a good proposition, probably, although he has not given it personally enough attention to indorse it, but that he does not want to encumber this bill. That He does not want to encumber this bill. is the whole difficulty. There had been sufficient investigation to know that this is a proper route as far back as Senator McMillan's time, I may say. This route around Florida avenue—the natural cross-town street over in this section of the country, to get a north and south line east of the Capitol-has been determined on for years. is not a single foot of north and south line east of this Capitol in the city of Washington.

I say to the Senator I did not want it to go unchallenged that this matter had not been given any investigation. If there is any particular point that has not been covered in the Senator's mind or upon which he wishes information, perhaps some of the Senators who listened to the hearings can enlighten him.

The Senator is giving us information. He has Mr. DANIEL. just given us information that was not before the Senate. He states, for instance, what we are not informed of in any report and which I had not heard stated in any observation that had been made, that this is known and conceded to be a proper route for this railroad. May I ask the Senator, then, what is the objection to putting it in this bill, and how it would encumber the bill to do anything that everybody agrees in? What is the objection to it?

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Senator that so far as I am concerned in my judgment there is not any objection to it. I am advocating it. But there were some members of the committee who thought it would encumber this bill to attach to it the building of this additional track out there, as the Senator said; that it is a good deal of trackage; that there would be objection on the part of some other street car line to this company building the track, and it would raise discussion and dispute and possibly delay the bill, and possibly defeat the bill. Mr. DANIEL. May I inquire if any company has objected to this before the District Committee?

Mr. BURKETT. So far as I know they have not, but there is running all through the thing a general feeling that the other street car company, whatever its name may be, will object to this company building that car line.

Mr. DANIEL. Would this company object to the other company building that car line?

Mr. BURKETT. I am not advised. They have not the con-

Mr. DANIEL. The Senator is not advised either way?

Mr. BURKETT. The other car line has not the connection. I will say, for Florida avenue. This is an extension of the existing Florida avenue line that runs from Eighteenth street clear down to Seventh street, and then turns down Seventh street, and it contemplates building all around Boundary street, Florida avenue. It is a proper line to build there. It is just a continuation of the present line.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I am not on the committee, and naturally I am not conversant with what may be the real or supposititious rivalries or competitions of the various companies. So far as we are informed, the Washington and Electric Company has made no objection-no official objection, at least-to this, and so far as we are informed this company has made no objection to the other company coming around that way if it chooses to do so. Some day Congress has got to decide this matter, if the people of the District who wish street car accommodations are going to get them.

Here is a statement undenied that 73,000 people in a large section have not the facilities which they should have for communication with this great city. Is there any difficulty about this company being able and ready to build this line? That is a question which it might be proper to ask. If we require them to do it, are they in a situation in which they can do it? All these questions naturally occur to one who is going into a case which he has not examined.

It is with great diffidence that I say anything, but I think these people ought to be heard, and I think it would be preferable, if agreeable to the Senator from New Hampshire, to have this amendment considered now, to have it considered at this session of Congress with reference to this bill, and to have a full report made to this body, so that it could form an intelligent and considerate judgment.

It seems that this very amendment once had the indorsement of the District Committee and reported it here; that it was referred back to the committee, and that it has been omitted from this bill, or left out in their consideration of this question, for fear that it might raise some trouble. Of course those unconversant with the hearings which they have had and the information which has been conveyed to them can not pass upon it with the intelligence or the fair regard for all considerations which they can, but that strikes me as being the best conclusion of the matter now. If the committee were to agree upon this bill, embrace this matter, and report it back, the probability is that the bill could be passed before the end of the present session.

The more we extend other accommodations to other railroads and to other interests the stronger they are to compete with any interest which might occupy a field on which they have their eyes for the future. It may be that it is a serious question whether the present railroad company, upon which this amendment would impose the duty of building this track, is strong enough to do it, and if that were true it would present a phase of the subject that would require at least very grave considera-

I have stated, Mr. President, all I know about this subject, and I only did that at the instance of the letter which was addressed to me.

While we are upon the subject—
Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. DANIEL. In a moment, with pleasure. I should like to inquire if this bill makes any charge upon the District of Columbia or upon the Government of the United States?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all, I will say to the Senator.

I thought not. Mr. DANIEL. Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all.

Mr. DANIEL. I should like to make another inquiry, as to whether the subject of transfers is fairly and justly encompassed here?

Mr. GALLINGER. The committee has not taken that matter under consideration at all. That is one of the controverted questions that it will require a very considerable time to consider when it is properly before the committee. In reporting in favor of this extension we have not gone into extraneous mat-ters, such as taxation, transfers, construction of new lines, and all those things. As chairman of the committee, I thought they were too serious to be taken up on a matter that was as urgent as this is in order to get these tracks extended to the Union

I do not want to have the traveling public walking two or three squares after the station is opened.

Mr. President, it seems to me, as 73,000 people are walking 4 miles, some other people can wait and walk half a mile while the 73,000 are trying to get over 4 miles.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to get a little information on this subject. The first point on which I desire information is this: How is it that 70,000 people, who have been clamoring for these privileges for several years, have neglected to make their influence sufficiently and strongly felt to get a bill before Congress to be acted upon as an independent meas-Why has this matter been delayed until the closing days of a Congress with no bill having been introduced, and these people suffering for the lack of proper street railway facilities?

This bill, as I understand, was introduced for the sole object of connecting the present existing lines of street railway with the new railway station, and with no other object whatever. It was not intended to go into the subject of the proper place for locating new lines of street railway for the service of the people; and, therefore, anyone interested in a new line would naturally understand that this bill was hardly the appropriate place for legislation concerning it, and that it should not be attached to a bill having for its single object the connection of existing lines with the new station. That is something that I certainly can not understand.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Burkett] has also stated that the objection is an objection on the part of other street railways, so I wish the Senator would also inform us what that objection can be. What business is it of the other street railways, who are not furnishing service to this section of the District, that others might or might not go in there and give the service? If there is any objection of that kind, I think we are entitled to know exactly what it is.

I certainly am in favor of voting in some manner for proper service for every section of the District; but I do not understand how any company that is not furnishing these facilities can consistently object to some other company, that desires to do so, furnishing them; and if any one of the three or four Senators who have spoken on this subject can give us any light on either of those two propositions, I think we should all of us be glad to hear from him.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, in view of what my colleague [Mr. McCumber] has said, I think I ought to explain that the pending bill, as I understand, contains practically the provision contained in the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Burkett]. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger], the chairman of the committee, has offered a substitute for that bill. That substitute does not provide for the street railway extension sought by the Senator from Nebraska. The bill which came from the committee last year contained this same provision. It was considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia, came here to the Senate, and, after some discussion, it was recommitted to the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I will

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I will simply say that the bill for which this is a substitute does not contain that provision.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The bill for which the Senator from New Hampshire has offered a substitute, as I understood it, contained a provision of that kind.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not, I will say to the Senator. Mr. HANSBROUGH. Then it was in the bill of last winter.

The provision which the Senator from Nebraska seeks to have incorporated in the Senator's substitute, was in the bill of last winter, was considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia, considered by the Senate, and recommitted to the committee. So that the Senate has had ample notice of this proposed extension.

One of the street railway systems here, as I understand, oposes the extension because it will get no advantage from it. The other street railway system seeks to make the extension because it would derive advantage from it.

Mr. McCUMBER. If my colleague will pardon me, I will ask what disadvantage will the other street railway companies incur?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. None whatever. Mr. McCUMBER. Then, why should they oppose it because they get no advantage?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. If my colleague were on the Committee on the District of Columbia he would find many reasons why the street railway companies here oppose legislation which they do not want.

If the Senator will permit me, I will say Mr. GALLINGER. to him that neither of the railway companies nor any person connected with either railway company has ever spoken to me about this extension,

Mr. BURKETT. I would say to the Senator from North Dakota that the question has not been answered as to what this has to do with connecting with the new depot. It does connect with the new depot, and that is the reason why the amendment should be adopted here. It is proposed to run a line down Florida avenue to Eighth street, down Eighth street to F street, and thence to the depot. It does connect the eastern part of the city of Washington and provides the means for the people of that section to get to the terminal. That is why the amendment was offered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Burkett].

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger].

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Is the proposed substitute open to amendment now, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is open to amendment.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Then I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted after section 12.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The Secretary. After section 12 it is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

new section the following:

Sec. 12. Every railway company now authorized by law, or which may hereafter be authorized by law, to operate cars on any of the streets, avenues, or highways of the District of Columbia, and all other public-service corporations of said District, including the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company, Potomac Electric Lighting and Power Company, and the Washington Gas Light Company, shall annually pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia, as a franchise tax, in addition to the taxes now imposed upon them by law, an amount equal to 12 per cent of their respective net earnings, which said net earnings shall be ascertained by deducting from their respective gross receipts from all sources only the current repairs and expenses for the same year, excluding interest, dividends, sinking fund, and enlargement of plant: Provided, That on or before the 1st day of August, 1906, the board of assessors of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to appraise and assess the personal property of all such public-service corporations, and in making such appraisement the said board shall appraise the value of the franchises of each of said companies and include the same in the said personal property appraisement: Provided further, That any of such corporations as may elect so to do may pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia an amount equal to 1½ per cent of said appraised value, as now provided for by law for general taxation of personal property in said District, which shall be in lieu of the 12 per cent per annum tax on net incomes, as above provided, and of the gross earnings tax now provided by law: And provided further, That the real estate of all said street railway companies in the District of Columbia shall be taxed as other real estate, but the tracks thereof shall not be taxed as real estate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from North Dakota whether he desires to speak to his amendment.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do not care to speak at length on the amendment, because a similar amendment was in the bill of last winter and was discussed in the Senate on two or three occasions prior to the recommittal of the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia. Unless Senators desire some information on the subject I do not care to debate it.

I will say, however, that I think the provision is a very just one. It is the result of very deep research on my part and on the part of at least one other person who is connected with the Government in this Capitol, who is a very accurate and thorough mathematician. He went into this subject as thoroughly as was possible and worked at it many days. I am satisfied that the provision is a just one and that it ought to be incorporated in this bill.

Mr. HALE. Would the Senator object to an amendment to his amendment providing for a general income tax throughout the United States?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, a general income tax is an altogether different branch of legislation, as it seems to me, and raises an entirely different question.

Mr. HALE. I think it does, but I think it would be equally germane to offer that as to offer the amendment which the Senator has proposed.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Does the Senator from Maine pretend to say that an amendment to this bill providing for a right of way for street railroads in Washington is not germane which provides for the taxation of those railroads? And does the Senator from Maine pretend to say that an income-tax amendment would be germane? The Senator is very unhappy in his simile, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. HALE. I suppose the bill in charge of the Senator from New Hampshire has a single object, and that is to adapt the present railway system in the District to communication with the new station-something in which everybody is interested. It does not involve the gas company, nor the electric-light company, nor the telephone company, nor income taxes of any kind upon them. I should say that the wisest thing is to confine the bill to the object sought by the committee and to perfect it on those lines.

When the Senator offers an amendment of the kind he has offered he opens every question which is not involved in the original bill. I do not suppose that we will add to the bill a provision for a general income tax throughout the country; but if we should do so, I do not think the departure from the original bill would be any greater than the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator would be an innovation on the original bill. I do not offer the amendment. I only made the suggestion to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to lay the amendment on the table. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" seem to have it. The "ayes" have it; and the motion is agreed to. The question recurs on the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger].

Mr. DANIEL, Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to lay the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia demands the yeas and nays on the motion to lay the amendment on the table

Mr. BACON. I ask that the amendment be again read. I was out of the Chamber temporarily.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment, at the request of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not want to be factious about this matter, but it occurs to me that the demand for the yeas and nays came too late. The Chair had made a declaration and then proceeded to put another question to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If the point is raised, the Chair will be compelled to hold that the demand came after the decision, and the Senate had proceeded to other business

Mr. GALLINGER. I do make the point, Mr. President. Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to withdraw his motion to lay on the table, so that we may wrote directly on the proposition.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the question be put.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended. Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. DUBOIS. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. The VICE-PRESIDENT. To the amendment that was agreed to as in Committee of the Whole? Mr. DUBOIS. Yes; it is to come in before section 8. It can be called "section 71.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to insert as a new section, to be known as "section  $7\frac{1}{2}$ ," the following:

be known as "section 7½," the following:

That all street railway companies within the District of Columbia, both now and hereafter to be chartered by Congress, shall receive and exchange tickets with each other, and shall also give to passengers free transfers which shall be received by all street railway companies at one intersection and connection with all other street railway lines; and also give to and receive from each passenger paying one cash fare of 5 cents a free transfer good for more than one exchange at one intersection, and good continuously at all intersections with all street railways and from intersection to intersection, within the said District of Columbia; but transfers on tickets or cash fares shall not be good for a round trip.

And every officer or agent of any street railway company and every street railway company, for every violation of the provisions of this section, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10 by the police court of the District of Columbia on prosecution by information brought by the corporation counsel or any of his assistants, and any person or corporation interested shall have the right to apply to the supreme court of the District of Columbia for a mandamus to enforce the free transfers by this act provided.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, that amendment was consid-

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, that amendment was considered by the subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia. I was a member of that subcommittee, and it was unanimously agreed to. My recollection is that it was also unanimously agreed to by the full committee. It seems to me to be a very proper provision and one that ought to be put on this bill.

We are legislating in the interests of the street railway companies, and, in my opinion, the amendment is germane. We are giving them additional facilities, and I think everyone knows that the facilities which they give the public are very inadequate. I do not know of any street railway lines in the country that are less adequate than those in Washington. There ought to be some time and some place where we can legislate a little in the interests of the Washington public, and I do not believe there can be any proper objection to this amendment providing for transfers being incorporated in the pending bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Dubois] is quite mistaken when he suggests that the full committee approved this provision.

The Senator's amendment is foreign to the bill; it has no relevancy to it whatever. It is a question that may properly be considered at some time by the committee, if a bill shall be offered; but I do hope that no serious effort will be made to encumber the pending bill with a provision of that kind.

It has become the fashion of late to decry the street railway service of Washington. I do not agree at all with the gentlemen who make those criticisms. I believe we have got the best street railway system here that there is in this country, if not in the world, and any proper effort that is made to improve it will certainly receive my cordial cooperation.

The matter of universal transfers is one that is not to be determined off-hand. I have said once or twice before what I am going to repeat, notwithstanding I know that certain Senators have passed it off with a wave of the hand, that this is the only city, so far as I know-I believe there is one other in the country, though I have forgotten which one it is-that requires the street railways to sell six tickets for 25 cents. The difference between the straight 5-cent fare, which I pay in Boston, New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and other cities, and six tickets for 25 cents in Washington is over $400,000 a year, which goes into the pockets of the people of the District of Columbia and the people who visit this capital.

Now, to place another burden upon the street railway companies without any investigation, without any hearing, to my mind is not the right thing to do. So I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to withhold that motion until I make a statement.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.
Mr. PATTERSON. I do not want the statement made by the Senator from New Hampshire to go unchallenged that this and one other city are the only cities in the United States in which six fares are sold for a quarter. In the city of Cleveland, thanks to Tom Johnson, the street railway company has voluntarily reduced fares to 31 cents, with transfers at nearly all of their cross lines.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not all of them. Mr. PATTERSON. In Detroit about one-half of the street railways of that city charge but 3-cent fares, and lately, at the last election, the street railway company that had been charging 5 cents and that owned practically the entire street railway sys tem of Detroit, asked for a franchise in which it proposed that for six hours in each twenty-four tickets at the rate of eight for 25 cents should be sold—that is, should be sold and used for six hours of the twenty-four, and that during all the rest of the day the tickets bought at the rate of six for 25 cents should be used. I am not certain, Mr. President, but that in several other cities the six-for-a-quarter ticket system prevails.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I think he will search in vain for those several other cities. I should like to ask the Senator if this proposed innovation in the city of Detroit was not submitted to a popular vote, and was voted down two to one?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; and I will state what that meant, Mr. President. There is a fight being made in the city of Detroit for a flat 3-cent fare, good for twenty-four hours in each day, and the street railway company, to combat that, to overcome it, and to settle the controversy, made the proposition to sell eight tickets for a quarter, good for six hours a day, to be used by men and women going to and from their work, and six tickets for a quarter to be used during the rest of the twenty-four hours. The people who are demanding a universal 3-cent fare voted down by a very large majority this very generous proposition upon the part of the street railway company in Detroit.

It was not because the people of Detroit were unwilling to receive such reductions in fare as the railway company voluntarily offered, but because the people of Detroit realized that even such rates are too high, in view of the enormous profits the railway companies in such cities as Detroit are making all over the country

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator is not as accurate as he usually is. They did not vote it down upon any such ground. I have sent for a letter from the mayor of Detroit which I have in my committee room and which I think can be found. I will read that letter and show the Senator that the people of Detroit voted it down upon an entirely different ground.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, my statement was made upon the basis of the Associated Press dispatch that was sent from Detroit giving the result of the city election, the election being held upon the same day that the regular State election I am also inclined to think that the same mayor was overwhelmingly defeated in the city of Detroit because he stood for the propositions advanced by the railway companies and opposed the attitude that was taken by the mass of the people.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. Did I understand the Senator to say that the people of Detroit voted down the proposition to reduce the fare on the street railways because it did not reduce them enough?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir.
Mr. GALLINGER. They were unwilling to take a reduction and so voted?

Mr. PATTERSON. They have got a fight on. The franchises, Mr. President, of the street railway companies of Detroit are about expiring, and the people of Detroit are determined that they shall have something to say as to the provisions of the franchises when they are renewed or extended, and they did not propose, and they do not propose, as the people of no city should be willing to admit, that the street railway companies alone shall be consulted in determining what they shall charge the traveling public for riding.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course we all agree with the Senator on that point.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; and I have never before heard controverted the statement that that was the real issue in the re-cent election between the people of Detroit and the street railway companies.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say a word with reference to the boast made by the Senator from New Hampshire about the magnificent service of the street railways of the city of Washington. I do not know much about any other line except the line that I have ridden on for two or three winters, and that is the Connecticut avenue line; but I want to say that such a service as that is an outrage. In the mornings and in the evenings, time and time and time again, I have ridden on the cars of that line. I counted upon one occasion seventeen people standing on the front platform and nearly a like number standing on the rear platform, and the interior was crowded as would have been a cattle car before Congress undertook to legislate upon that subject. It seemed to me that if there ever city in which the antistrap hangers' association should be organized—the fundamental doctrine of which is that unless a passenger upon a street car can get a seat he will pay no fareit ought to be organized in the city of Washington.

The cars are good, Mr. President. There is no complaint to be made about the cars that are furnished, and I suppose that the fact that they are operated by underground electric lines is very much to the credit of Congress and very much to the credit of the railway companies.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should think the Senator ought to take that into account.

Mr. PATTERSON. But I want to say that they do not commence to furnish the service that the traveling public of Washington is entitled to receive. But, then, this is the history of the dealings of the municipal corporations, as a rule, with the people of all the cities of the country. Until the body possessing the legislative power, whether it be a State legislature or Congress or a city council, shall be controlled and governed by the interests of the people, and not by the interests of the railway companies, we are going to continue to have these impositions placed upon city travel that we find existing in every city of any size in the country.

have no disposition to interfere with this particular bill, but I do not want statements that will affect controversies of this kind in the future and in other localities to go unchallenged.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to read the letter I alluded to a moment ago. It is from Hon. George P. Codd, mayor of the city of Detroit, and dated December 10, 1906:

Replying to your letter of the 7th instant relative to the sale of street car tickets in Detroit, would say that for about fifteen days prior to our last election (November 6) the Detroit United Railway, owner and operator of all of our city railway lines, placed on sale in its cars industrial tickets, so called, ten for 25 cents, the same to be used between the hours of 5.30 and 8 a. m. and 4.30 and 6.30 p. m.; at other hours tickets to be sold six for 25 cents were available; single cash fare, as at present, 5 cents.

These fares were in accordance with the provisions of an ordinance prepared by the mayor, submitted by him to the common council, and in turn to the electors for their approval at the election heretofore mentioned. The ordinance was defeated by a vote of approximately 20,000 to 10,000.

I would say in this connection that the rates of fare paid under the existing franchise held by the company are, for about 40 per cent of the track mileage, between the hours of 6 a. m. and 7.30 p. m., eight tickets for 25 cents; during the remainder of the day, six tickets for 25 cents; single fare, 5 cents. For all of the remainder of the lines, which in clude all the principal streets of the city, the fare is straight 5 cents, with no tickets except between the hours of 5 a. m. and 6.30 a. m. and 4.45 p. m. and 5.45 p. m., when so-called "workingmen's tickets," eight for 25 cents, are accepted for fare.

It seems that most of the lines in Detroit are at present getting a straight 5-cent fare, which is a very different proposition even from six tickets for 25 cents. According to my information, Detroit, after a trial for a short time, went back to the 5-cent fare, or at least practically so, although they have for an hour or two in the morning and evening workingmen's tickets at a lower rate.

I meant when I was on my feet to say that it does make a very great difference whether we have overhead wires in our streets, as they have in most other cities, or this magnificent underground system, which costs approximately three times as much. I repeat that while there are strap hangers in Washington, as there are in Boston and in every other city, and always will be as long as street railways are run, in my judgment we have the best street railway system in Washington that there is in the United States. That is my opinion, and I have ridden on them all.

Mr. PATTERSON. The letter of the mayor of Detroit does not controvert the statement I made and which the Senator from New Hampshire intended to controvert. I think he discovers on reading the letter that my position is exactly correct. The letter does not give the reason for defeating the ordinance presented to the people of Detroit by the mayor of Detroit, which provided for eight tickets for a quarter during six hours, or practically a 3-cent fare, for the benefit of workingmen and working women, and six tickets for a quarter during the rest of the twenty-four hours. The people of Detroit voted that proposition down, although it had been put into practical effect by the company in order that the voters of Detroit might have knowledge of what it meant to them. They voted it down by two to one, and, as I stated, the reason they voted it down is because they are struggling in Detroit, as Tom Johnson is struggling in Cleveland, for a 3-cent fare straight. Tom Johnson has about won out.

With reference to the history of the street railway struggle in Detroit let me say this: According to the letter of the mayor, 40 per cent of the street railways in Detroit give ten tickets for a quarter.

Mr. GALLINGER. No.
Mr. PATTERSON. Then eight. Let me have the letter.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. The mayor says:

Mr. PATTERSON. The mayor says:

Replying to your letter of the 7th instant, relative to the sale of streetcar tickets in Detroit, would say that for about fifteen days prior to our last election (November 6) the Detroit United Rallway, owner and operator of all of our city railway lines, placed on sale in its cars industrial fickets, so called, ten for 25 cents, the same to be used between the hours of 5.30 and 8 a. m. and 4.30 and 6.30 p. m.; at other hours tickets to be sold six for 25 cents were available; single cash fare, as at present, 5 cents.

These fares were in accordance with the provisions of an ordinance prepared by the mayor, submitted by him to the common council and, in turn, to the electors for their approval at the election heretofore mentioned. The ordinance was defeated by a vote of approximately 20,000 to 10,000.

Now, what do we find there? A voluntary offer by the street railway company of Detroit-

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

Mr. PATTERSON. It must have been, because the street railway companies put these tickets on sale ten for a quarter for fifteen days before election, voluntarily and not as the result of any ordinance.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was in obedience to an ordinance, as the Senator will see, if he will read the letter.

Mr. PATTERSON. No.

Mr. GALLINGER. Ob, yes.
Mr. PATTERSON. They submitted an ordinance making that arrangement permanent, but the railway company had experimented before the election with tickets—ten for a quarter or 2½ cents a ride for six hours of the day, three in the morning and three in the afternoon—in order to bait the voting public to accepting that proposition.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not quite six hours, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. PATTERSON. Six for a quarter, to be used during the rest of the twenty-four hours; ten for a quarter, to be used for six hours. The people of Detroit voted it down because, as I have said, they are fighting for a straight 3-cent fare, and they know they are going to get it. The mayor says further:

I would say, in this connection, that the rates of fare paid, under the existing franchise held by the company, are for about 40 per cent of the track mileage between the hours of 6 a. m. and 7.30 p. m. eight tickets for 25 cents; during the remainder of the day, six tickets for 25 cents; single fare, 5 cents. For all of the remainder of the lines, which include all the principal streets of the city, the fare is straight 5 cents, with no tickets, except between the hours of 5 a. m. and 6.30 a. m. and 4.45 p. m. and 5.45 p. m., when so-called "workingmen's" tickets, eight for 25 cents, are accepted for fare.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.
Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to him that the straight 5-cent fare on the remainder of the lines makes a great deal more difference than the small fare during those few hours.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is the condition existing in Detroit.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.
Mr. PATTERSON. It is from that condition that the railway company of Detroit desired voluntarily to depart, to eliminate all 5-cent fares practically, because when the people can get six tickets for a quarter and ten tickets for a quarter, only those who do not happen to have a quarter to buy tickets are going to pay 5 cents for a ride. The railway company would continue the old 5 cents' extortion were it not for the fact that the people of Detroit have been educated to the meaning of the extortion as it is practiced there and practiced in nearly every other city of the country by the street-railway com-panies—the same extortion that was practiced in Cleveland until Tom Johnson became its mayor, and he has at last succeeded practically in eliminating it, as the result of a six years' hard, consistent, and persistent fight. In my opinion Washington, next to Denver, is the best street railway city in the world, if there is any city in the world in which a 3-cent fare could be given to the traveling public with a good profit, it is the city of Washington.

I was heartily in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Hansbrough] providing for the payment, in lieu of the tax on gross receipts, of one and one half per cent of the assessed valuation of their property as that value may be discovered. But I realized that it was idle to make a struggle for that now, and I also realize the force of the suggestion made by the Senator from New Hampshire that to a certain extent it was not germane. But, in view of the statement made by the Senator from New Hampshire, I wanted these facts to be brought out clearly and explicitly, because this fight is going to come on in Washington some day and not very far in the future, as it will come on in every other city of magnitude in the United States; and it is going to be with the street railways as it is going to be with the great railroads of the country, that they will either do the right thing by the traveling public or the cities themselves will own and operate the lines and do what is being done in Great Britain and France and Germany and Spain—give the traveling public not 3-cent fares, or 21-cent fares, but 1-cent and 2-cent fares, in proportion to the distance traveled.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a single observation. has been stated that it is proper to load down this bill with extraneous matter for the reason that we are in this legislation granting favors to the street railways. That is not correct. The street railways, when they get to the Union Station, will probably not get a single passenger more in a month than they get in going to the two stations under existing arrangements. We compel them to change and extend their tracks at an expenditure, I judge, of about a half a million dollars, for which they will get no return.

The matter of transfers is a very serious one, Mr. President. We will take the Washington Electric Company for an illustration. It is composed of thirteen different companies, I believe. ten or eleven of which were bankrupt a few years ago. They were consolidated, and money was obtained in New York to finance them. If the Senator will look at the market reports to-day, he will find that their 4 per cent bonds are selling at 854, and their stock is way below par. Now, that company will doubtless be a profitable company some time in the future. have no doubt of it. I think they have a splendid chance to develop in the city of Washington and to make some money. They are not making it now. It does seem to me that it would be unwise to impose this additional burden upon that corporation, comprising thirteen street railways, consolidated now, financed by foreign money, paying no dividends on their common stock, their 4 per cent bonds selling at 85½, or thereabout, when we, in the little State of New Hampshire, sell our 3½ per cent city bonds above par.

I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will withdraw his motion, so that I may offer just a few

Mr. GALLINGER. I withdraw it if the Senator wishes to speak briefly

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, if the local press is to be relied upon there is a statute requiring these street railway companies to exchange transfers in accordance with the provisions of the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Dubois]. I myself have not had the opportunity to look up the statute, for I have not had the time. But I have seen it stated in at least two of the newspapers of this city, and have not seen it denied, that there now is a statute compelling a free exchange of transfers, but that Congress, when it enacted that statute, neglected to put a penalty clause therein, and so the street railway companies have refused to obey it simply because there is not a clause in connection therewith under which they might be prosecuted and fined. I do not youch for this at all, but I give it as I have read it in the newspapers.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will suggest to the Senator that I believe when a street railway called the "Capital Railway Company" was chartered, which was a little sore-thumb line across the river here somewhere about half a mile in length, a provision requiring transfers between that company and one of the existing lines in the District was put in the charter. I do not suppose anybody on earth noticed it, as the company which had that provision in its charter went out of existence in a little while. The provision was not for universal transfers by any I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire, to lay on the table the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS].

The motion was agreed to. The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF WASHINGTON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6338) to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Diocese of Washington," which was, on page 2, line 22, to strike out all after "in" down to and including "securities," line 24, and insert: bonds of the United States, or of the District of Columbia, in first-class State or municipal securities; in first mortgages or first deeds of trust on real estate not exceeding 60 per cent of the value of such real estate or in the first mortgage bonds of any railroad corporation, which has for five consecutive years immediately preceding such invest-ment paid dividends on its common stock.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

IMPERIAL VALLEY AND COLORADO RIVER IRRIGATION PROJECTS.

Mr. FLINT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7776) to provide for protecting the interests of the United States on the lower Colorado River, for the establishment of the Imperial Valley and the Colorado River irrigation projects, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the sum of $2,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to survey, examine, and acquire necessary rights and property, and to construct and maintain such works as may be necessary to strengthen and protect the banks of the Colorado River, and confine its waters within the same, and to prevent the overflow thereof, and in connection with such embankments and works to construct such reservoirs, headworks, canals, and waterways as may be requisite in connection therewith for the irrigation of lands in the Imperial and other valleys adjacent to said Colorado River: Provided. Sec. 2. That such portion of the cost of the works and maintenance of same provided for in the foregoing section as the Secretary of the Interior may determine to be of direct benefit to any irrigation project shall be by him equitably apportioned to such project as a part of the original cost thereof under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, and acts amendatory thereof. The amount so apportioned shall be assessed against the lands benefited in conformity with the provisions of said a

Sec. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect.

Mr. KEAN. I desire to ask the Senator from California when he expects the $2,000,000 to be returned?

Mr. FLINT. I expect the $2,000,000 to be returned at the end of ten years from the time the work is commenced under the terms of the bill.

Mr. KEAN. The people have already paid for this land, have they not?

Mr. FLINT. No; the land is all practically public land of the United States.

Mr. KEAN. But it has been assessed once?

Mr. FLINT. They have paid a water tax to a private corporation; none to the Government.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MANAGEMENT OF PANAMA RAILROAD.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6539) to control the direction and management of the Panama Railroad.

Mr. HEYBURN. I call for the regular order. Then I will be willing to yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I suggest that this bill be permitted to pass, and then the Senator from Idaho can call for the regular

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consider-It proposes that the Panama Railroad and all the property and rights thereof, or appurtenant thereto, shall be placed in the charge of the Isthmian Canal Commission, to be managed, used, controlled, and accounted for by the Commission, under the direction of the President of the United States, as other property of the United States connected with the Isthmian Canal is controlled, managed, directed, and accounted for.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISSUANCE OF LAND PATENTS.

Mr. HEYBURN. I call for the regular order, Mr. President. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho calls for the regular order. It will be stated.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. Carter on the 9th instant, as follows:

Resolved. That under the homestead laws of the United States a duly qualified entryman furnishing competent evidence of full compliance with said laws and all rules and regulations promulgated by authority thereof is, in the absence of contest or of any charge or evidence of fraud or mistake, legally entitled to a patent for the land embraced in the entry as to which final proof has been so furnished, and no executive officer is authorized to forbid and prevent the issuance and delivery of such patent.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it is not my intention at this late hour of the day to do more than to present some preliminary remarks upon the pending resolution. I desire to consider it briefly from the standpoint of the President's message, which advises us officially of the order that has been discussed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter] to-day. I refer to the President's message of December 17, in which he advises us, among other things, that he has issued an Executive order directing "the Secretary of the Interior to allow no patent to be issued to public land under any law until by an examination on the ground actual compliance with that law has been found to exist." That is the complete sentence, which it coupled with

I call attention to the fact that Congress has provided by law when and under what conditions a patent shall issue for public lands, and that this is a declaration by the President that he has instructed one of his Cabinet officers to stay the operation of the law of Congress. The United States Supreme Court, as early as 1801, was called upon to pass on the power of the President to make such an Executive order. Congress, at its first session, enacted a law imposing a certain duty upon the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States. It became the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the happening of certain things, to execute an instrument, to place the seal of the Government upon it. The President of the United States directed him not to do it for reasons that are set forth in the opinion of the Supreme Court. The question came squarely before the Supreme Court of the United States whether the President could suspend either the execution or the operation of a law merely because the officer directly intrusted with the execution of the law happened to be a member of the President's executive council.

It was undertaken to sustain the act of the President upon the ground that the Secretary of the Treasury, being merely the agent or representative of the President in the execution of the law, the President's command was supreme, and that he had a right to stay his own hand; consequently he had a right to stay that of a Cabinet officer. The Supreme Court held that when Congress cnacted a statute upon a subject, it was from that time on beyond the power of the President to stay the hand of the official to whom Congress delegated the duty of putting the law into execution.

The case came up again about 1825, and the United States Supreme Court reaffirmed the doctrine of the case, which is reported in 1 Cranch, decided in 1801.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the title of the case?
Mr. HEYBURN. The case in Cranch is Marbury v. Madison. The other is the case of Kendall v. The United States, in 12

I would refer to them more in detail, but I think that at least at this late hour it will be sufficient for the purpose to merely state the force and effect of the decisions.

Now, a question is presented to the Senate by a message from the President in which he recites the act. It is not a question to be proven outside of the record at all. He tells us officially that he has made this order and directed the Secretary of the Interior not to execute the existing land laws, because the refusal to issue the patent is equivalent to a refusal to execute any of the preliminary steps that lead up to a patent, for they are futile except that they result in the issuance of a patent. So the Executive order has practically stayed the hand of every homesteader, of every person claiming title to land under any public-land act.

LEGAL PHASE OF THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE FIRST.

It was stated by the Senator from Montana to-day that a subsequent order had relaxed this rule as it affected mining claims. I have not had that subsequent order called to my attention. will examine it between now and the time when I resume the consideration of this question. But I present this legal phase of the President's message first, and with the indulgence of the Senate I will take up each provision of the message, because it is on the table and it is germane to the resolution offered by the Senator from Montana.

I desire to say, Mr. President and Senators, that no question before Congress at this or any other session involves in a larger measure the interests of the people, either as that interest affects their happiness and prosperity or as measured in dollars and cents. The value of the public lands of the United States against which the rights of the settlers are stayed by this order represents hundreds of millions of dollars. The force and effect of this order is directed against our own citizens at home. It is directed against those who are living in that western country to-day, and it is directed against the surplus popution of the East, to whom that land is the only land and the best land of promise in the world to-day. It is the land to which the sons of our ancestors went and bettered themselves because of the opportunities that that new frontier offered to them. It affects us. It affects the people of New England and of the Middle States and of the Southern States as much as it affects the people who are living there kaiting for the right to rsume their efforts to secure a home, because every day every train that goes to the West bears away from this eastern country men who go there for the purpose of taking advantage of those great natural resources.

The march has been unbroken since the earliest settlement on the banks of the Delaware and the Hudson and upon the bays of Massachusetts and the rivers of Virginia. When our ancestors landed upon these shores they started westward almost with the same impulse. I was reading the other day of the conditions that presented themselves to the pioneers who landed at the various points, and the author-and it was a very old work, and a very creditable one—said that the country from Massachusetts to North Carolina was practically one solid dense woodland, that the great majority of it was covered with forests, some of it valuable and some of it of no value.

We are too apt to think that these beautifully cleared and cultivated fields always existed. We are too apt to think that when our ancestors landed there was here and there a woodland patch, with the great majority of the land cleared. It was not so. They had to hew their way from the very margin of the river back, making the little acre plot one year and the larger tract another and pressing the forest ever back before them until you have the conditions that exist here to-day.

The people who belong to the West, those who are there and those who have a desire to go there, only want an equal chance with those who made this civilization. This Executive order has absolutely destroyed the opportunity of at least one genera-tion to avail themselves of that right. I say one generation, because I want to call your attention to the other declaration in the Executive order that is coupled with that, and which is crystallized in the request that is now before the Committee on Appropriations to give them hundreds of thousands of dollars for the purpose of emphasizing and rendering more odious this Executive order.

I do not desire to be charged with being purposely disrespectful or of attacking the Executive, but I may and I intend to criticise this order in unstinted terms. That is our function, our right, and our duty. This is the phrase coupled with it. will read this paragraph in order that it may be more intelligible. The President says:

I am gravely concerned at the extremely unsatisfactory condition of the public-land laws.

Those land laws have been in force for fifty years. The population of the country where those land laws have been in force in that fifty years has grown to the extent of about 20,000,000 people. The wealth of the country represented by the application of those laws during that time can only be counted in the figures of multiple millions. Yet we find one branch of this great Government gravely concerned at the "extremely unsatisfactory condition" of the laws.

Now, if the concern of the President was as to the extremely unsatisfactory condition of the execution of the laws, he might also be induced to look to the details of the manner of their also be induced to look to the details of the manner of the execution. But we know those laws. They are older than the execution of any man in this body. We know them, and public experience of any man in this body. We know the there is slight ground for complaining of the land laws. never was a more perfect system of settlement, the building up of States, conceived by mortal man than is embodied in those land laws, and I so speak because we have the results before us, and it is not a conjecture, but an experience.

And at the prevalence of fraud under their present provisions-Well, you heard here to-day from the official figures of this Department of the Government, you heard it stated here to-day, and it was a fact, the figures of which I also have before me, that the percentage of fraud, mistake, and misadventure in compliance with the law under the homestead act is less than one-third of 1 per cent. As was said by the Senator from Montana, one might be led to believe from the hue and cry and the newspaper statements that the whole system was honeycombed with fraud; that the honest, true settlement was the exception. Yet we find that out of an expenditure of $2,000,000 available to the Department for the purpose of detecting and punishing fraud and correcting entries because of fraud we had eighty-four cases of proven fraud last year. Mr. NEWLANDS, Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho vield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do. Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the Senator, outside of the question of fraud, whether he thinks the public-land laws as now framed are suited to the economic requirements of the Does he think that they are so guarded as to prevent timber lands and coal lands from falling into the hands of great trusts and combinations? Does he think they are so framed as to permit the proper use of the grazing lands of the

Mr. HEYBURN. Those questions are all presented by this message, and I propose later in the discussion of this subject to take them up in their order. I will say, generally, in answer to the question asked by the Senator from Nevada, that I think the homestead law is as applicable and as beneficial as it was when it was enacted. It is applicable to a certain class of land. It never was applicable to any other classes of land. Consequently wherever that class of lands exists human necessity is the same; the conditions under which men want homes and take them are the same. So the homestead law needs very little changing. It was a better law before it was tinkered with a few years ago, when the commutation clause was framed in the language in which it is now written. I shall have occasion to discuss that later.

The percentage of fraud in the coal entries is so slight as to be not worth mentioning. This fraud exists largely in the imagination. No larger per cent of fraud exists to-day than existed twenty, thirty, or forty years ago.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. Mr. NEWLANDS. My question involves considerations entirely outside of the question of fraud. My question was whether these laws have met the economic requirements of the West, so as to prevent monopoly.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would ask the Senator on his suggestion, what he means by economic conditions or requirements?

Mr. NEWLANDS. So far as the homestead law is concerned, my answer is that that was framed for a humid region, and that almost all the public lands now remaining are in the arid and semiarid region. That law is not suited to the requirements of that region. My next proposition is—

Mr. HEYBURN. Let us deal with that, if the Senator does not object. The homestead law, as I suggested, is applicable to exactly the same class of land as it was made to be applied to at the time of its enactment; and if those same lands still exist, then the law is beneficial.

Mr. SPOONER. To the same class of people. Mr. HEYBURN. To the same class of pe Mr. HEYBURN. To the same class of people. American citizenship has not changed in that time. Its needs are the same and its ambitions are the same. The Senator speaks of that class of lands being exhausted. I can say to the Senator that in the section of the United States I have in mind, where I live when I am at home, those lands are not exhausted by many millions of acres. If there are lands that do not come within the purview of the homestead laws, that are desert, arid, or semiarid, then they come within other laws. As we approach those different subdivisions classified in this message I will take occasion to discuss them, and I will be glad at the time when I take them up to hear any interruption the Senator may desire to make. I want to finish reading this paragraph. The President says:

For much of this fraud the present laws are chiefly responsible.

That is the reference to the prevalence of fraud under the present provisions of the law. Congress has made one great mistake and it is making it every day. It will enact a statute up to a certain point of sufficiency, and then it will say "subject to such rules and regulations as may be made by the Secretary of the Interior," or another officer. We are getting to be too much a Government of rules and regulations. It is my inten-tion at a convenient time to introduce and ask the Senate to pass a resolution calling for a report from each Department of the Government of every rule and regulation that is in force in those Departments.

Now the fraud where fraud exists, or to the extent that it exists, and to which the President refers in this message, is not fraud occurring under the law, but it occurs under rules and regulations, either uncertain in their meaning, difficult to be complied with, or where the parties are under rules and regulations made pursuant to a general grant of power given by Congress which should never have been given.

RULES AND REGULATIONS.

We are quite as competent to make rules and regulations within the statute in this body as any body of executive clerks is to make them, and we have ability enough to do it. We have the ability and the time and the legal obligation to make what are called rules and regulations ourselves.

Now, I will finish reading that paragraph, because no more important message ever came to this body than that. To tell us that men who have spent five years upon their homesteads, expecting that at the end of that time they would receive patents and be able to establish themselves as responsible citizens in a community, that they would have substantial property as a capital with which to do business, the day before they go to the office to receive their muniment of title that the hand of the officials shall be stayed, and they shall be told "until we have an appropriation from Congress that will enable us to send special officers to examine these facts that you have sworn to and that your neighbors have sworn to, we can not give you that patent.

Mr. SPOONER. There is no qualification? Mr. HEYBURN. There is no qualification Mr. HEYBURN. There is no qualification whatever. There is no exception to this refusal. There are 4,000. I have the exact figures. I have an official statement here of the number of patents that are tied up.

Mr. FULTON. There are 52,000 and some.
Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. These figures will probably astonish Senators as showing the number of entries affected by this order. I have the exact figures in the shape of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and perhaps I had better turn to it. I will give the figures. There are 52,481 land cases pending that are tied up by this Executive order on that day. There are probably that many more by this date, because they are coming in at an average rate of about 104,000 a year. There are of coal entries, tied up by this order, 327; of final desert-land entries there are 2,606 pending in the recorder's office that have been examined, passed upon favorably, reduced to the patent-to the written instrumentneeding only the act of delivery. There are 6,570 patents in that shape that are suspended, tied up by that order.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.
Mr. SPOONER. I ask it for information only. I have not examined the order at all. Does the Senator intend to be understood as saying that it applies to homestead cases, the entry of agricultural land upon which a person has moved and taken his family, made his improvements, and lived the requisite period and obtained his final certificate?

Mr. HEYBURN. It says so in terms.
Mr. SPOONER. And uncontested by anybody?
Mr. HEYBURN. It says so in terms. Thi This is the lan-

Mr. FULTON. Let me say it not only says so in terms, but it is so administered. My mail is burdened every day with letters of homesteaders who have resided on their lands during the requisite time, made the requisite proof, and yet-Mr. SPOONER. There has been no contest?

Mr. SPOONER. There has been no contest?
Mr. FULTON. No contest; no intimation or contention of fraud. Their patents are withheld.
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator from Idaho allow me a moment?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am informed and am compelled to believe it is true that under this order thousands of patents which have been already written out in the General Land Office, waiting only to be recorded, have been held up, and the recording force are about to be put at something else.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would say that in the class just referred to of such cases there are 6,570, and in addition to those pending in the recorder's office, which have been approved for patent but that patent has not yet issued, there were 5,531 pending in the special agents' division. Now, that first class of 6,570 has passed the scrutiny of the special agents and of every other class of investigation.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me just a moment? Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Did the Senator from Wyoming, in speaking of patents which have been made out and only waiting for record, mean to imply by that that the patent has been signed, has been executed, and is only waiting for record?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am not advised as to that.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator will permit me, I will say I understand that there are fully 5,000 patents written up, ready for signature, or waiting record only, that were suspended under There is no charge of any kind or character.

Mr. HEYBURN. This is an official letter which I have received in response to my inquiry. I shall detain the Senate but a few minutes more to-day. I call the attention of Senators to it because it is important:

Replying to your verbal request of to-day for information as to how many land cases are affected by the order of the Secretary of the Interior of December 18, 1906—

That is the day after the official order was issued-which order directed that no patent be hereafter issued to public land under any law until by examination on the ground by a special agent of your office or such other officer or agent of this Department as may be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, actual compliance with that law has been found to exist, I have to advise you that the report for the month ended December 31, 1906, showed 52,481 land cases pending in this office—

That is, the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. That does not include those pending in the Secretary's office.

Of this number 1,582 were mineral entries, 327 coal entries, and 2,606 final desert-land entries.

There were pending in the Public Lands Division 23,938 entries, which entries are final five-year and commuted homestead entries and timber and stone entries.

That is, in that branch of the Department.

The percentage of each is not definitely known, and can not be ascertained in time for this report, as I understand you desire it at once. There were also 6,570 entries of all classes pending in the recorder's office which have been approved for patent—

That is the official language-but patent not issued-

Those patents are signed. They do not go to the recorder's office until they are signed. If you look at the record of a patent you will find that it bears the signature of the President. When you get a certified copy you always get it from the recorder's office to show the signature. So those 6,570 patents have been signed by the Chief Executive or his authorized agent. but patent not issued, and 5,531 entries in the special agents' division under various stages of examination. These entries also embrace all different characters of entries.

That is in the one department.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose the Senator from Idaho does not contend that even after a patent had been signed, if the President had become satisfied, or had been informed in a way which warranted him in the belief, that fraud had been perpetrated on the Government and that the patent ought not to be delivered he would be obliged to deliver it.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I do not contend that he would be obliged to deliver it at all if there was a specific reason of that character why he should not.

Mr. SPOONER. If he was satisfied that a state of facts existed under which, if a patent were delivered, the Government could maintain a bill in equity to cancel it for fraud, would he or in a finite and the equity to cancer it for fraud, would be not be at liberty to withhold it?

Mr. HEYBURN. Entirely so.

Mr. SPOONER. It is not contended in this case, or in any of these cases, that such a condition exists. They have been passed to patent. The officer who participates in the final function makes that statement. If they had been suspended because of irregularities charged or suspected, he would have said so in his report.

Mr. HEYBURN. Of course. Mr. SPOONER. I am very much interested in the Senator's remarks, which are very able and clear; but if a person who was entitled to enter land has entered it under the homestead law, made the requisite improvements, and has even obtained his final certificate, and information is communicated to the Government that he has made that entry under contract to deed it to somebody else, that would be a fraud upon the homestead law which, if a patent had issued, would warrant the Government in filing a bill to set it aside. In such a case I suppose the Sena-tor admits that the President, if the patent had not been delivered, need not deliver it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Undoubtedly.
Mr. SPOONER. But you do not apply your observation to any such case?

Mr. HEYBURN. Not to any such case; but I think the Senator was perhaps not present this afternoon when the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter] read certain official documents setting forth the percentage of that class of frauds.

Mr. SPOONER. I was present part of the time, Mr. HEYBURN. It was upon that I based my statement that the percentage of canceled entries, not only for fraud but for fraud and mistake combined, was less than one in three hundred in homestead entries, and less than one in a hundred in regard to coal lands or some timber lands.

Mr. CARTER. That was as to final homestead entries.
Mr. HEYBURN. As to final homestead entries.
Mr. SPOONER. But they were not sufficient in number to warrant this general hold-up.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, inasmuch as these homestead entries are scattered throughout twenty-one odd States, it is not reasonable to believe that, if the President had been directly and reliably advised that the people in some one of those States were perpetrating a fraud, he ought to have held up the issuance of patents in all the other States.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will permit me, I will say that I am interested in what he is saying, and all the more because in some way this matter later will come before the Committee on Appropriations as a matter of appropriation, and I am being educated upon a subject upon which I have not much general information—the public lands. I was going to ask the Senator a question in the line of that asked by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooners]. Setting aside what might be true in any given case, even where patents had been signed and sent to the recorder's office, is there anything in this case, in this investigation, that shows what I may call such pervasive fraud or wrong-doing that it affects these thousands of patents; that it puts all of them under a ban, so that, in order to arrest what may be fraud, there has got to be such a general and sweeping exclusion as there has been? What is the ground taken by the Department as a justification for this broad falling of the ax on the heads of these applications?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, there is no ground that would satisfy the Senator's mind that there was any necessity for the making of this order.

Mr. HALE. What does the Secretary of the Interior say is the reason for issuing this sweeping and deadly order, which does not affect simply the cases that are marked by distinction as being personally fraudulent, but applying to thousands and thousands of men in a very large territory?

Mr. HEYBURN. We have no way of knowing what the Secretary of the Interior said to the President; but we know what the President said to the Secretary, and said it in this language, a part of which I have already read:

I am gravely concerned at the extremely unsatisfactory condition of the public-land laws and at the prevalence of fraud under their present provisions.

This is what the President says to us, and that is what he said to the Secretary:

For much of this fraud the present laws are chiefly responsible. There is but one way by which the fraudulent acquisition of these lands can be definitely stopped, and therefore I have directed the Secretary of the Interior to allow no patent to be issued to public land under any law until by an examination on the ground actual compliance with that law has been found to exist.

Congress did not provide for an investigation on the ground. It provided for the facts required to be established being established, as other facts are established, by sworn testimony.

Mr. HALE. And under that they are all held up.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; they are all held up. The attempt is made here to substitute a different class of proofs than that provided by the act of Congress to be made as a basis upon which a patent should issue. In other words, to substitute the testi-mony of one man, one agent, who shall go upon the ground for the testimony of two neighbors, who live convenient, to testify to the facts. It is a complete substitution, or an attempt to substitute, a new method of proof for the method provided by Congress. Nobody will contend that the executive department of the Government can do that.

Mr. FULTON. I should like to ask the Senator if even the sworn testimony of these agents is to be substituted? My understanding is that the Department simply requires a report, and that report is made not as a witness. He is not subjected to cross-examination, but he brings in a report that the homesteader has no opportunity whatever to meet. He goes out, under the authority of the Department of the Interior, with the understanding that the continuance of his employment depends upon the discovery of fraud, as he would call it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; his employment depends on his diligence.

Mr. FULTON. Yes. He makes a report. That report is not submitted to the homesteader. It is simply withheld. The settler does not meet the witnesses against him. He has no opportunity to refute their statements with other testimony.

ortunity to refute their statements with other testimony.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is a very cogent suggestion of the Senator from Oregon. The homesteader does not participate in the investigation by the agent. The proof that he has to submit is under oath—his own testimony and that of two of his neighbors. That covers every possible requisite of the law. Perhaps I should not have used the word "substitute," but it is in effect a substitute, because the Department disregards the proofs, which the law provides shall be sufficient, and substitutes, as a matter of practice, another class of proofs. The agent may go there in the absence of the settler. I feel at lib. the proofs, which the law provides shall be stitutes, as a matter of practice, another class of proofs. The stitutes, as a matter of practice, another class of proofs. I feel at liberty to say that a few weeks since I had a complaint by letter from a man who says that an agent had reported that he had been to his homestead twice and had not found him living there; and he states that on both occasions he was away on business. The agent goes there in the settler's absence and then goes away and makes a report saying, "I visited the homestead of John Jones yesterday; I made an examination, and I found no evidence of residence; I found no one in occupation of the premises." The man interested never sees the agent. There is no one to question or to cross-examine him. He makes his report and files it here. If you write to the Department to ascertain what is the status of a certain entry that is under investigation, you are apt to be told that the report of the examiner is not in; and the practice of the Department, when an examiner goes into the field, is to have him make fifteen or twenty or fifty examinations, but he often does not make a report upon any one of them until he has got his season's work done and comes back to his office. The result is that the title is tied up in the mean-

Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

at that point I desire to call attention to the practice as it is further inflicted upon these people. The report of the special agent is regarded in the Department as confidential, and the homestead entryman whose property is about to be swept away is denied the privilege of inspecting the report or ascertaining the nature of the charge preferred against him. In other cases I have known of favorable reports having been made-and I will venture the assertion to-night that there are hundreds of such pending in the Department—where a favorable report of the special agent has been pigeonholed and disregarded for years, and now the Department will not issue further patents or any evidence of title until in its own sweet pleasure and time it may elect so to do.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. KEAN. If the Senator from Idaho does not care to go on further this evening, I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business

Mr. HEYBURN. Very well; I will resume my remarks to-

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, January 30, 1907.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D. The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege. There appeared in yesterday's issue of the Public Ledger-a journal which I have been brought up to venerate, a journal great in the history of Philadelphia, a journal great in its present usefulness and reputation for accuracy and fairness—an article which, while perhaps unintentional, yet practically accuses each and every one of the Members of the Pennsylvania delegation of being supine in their efforts to obtain what was desired by the citizens of Pennsylvania for the improvement of Pennsylvania's waterways, and at the same time lending their best efforts to obtain an appropriation for an improvement in another State. First, let me say that I do not begrudge any sister State obtaining all that she can in the way of appropriations, nor do I consider myself, as I have not heard them discussed up to this time, sufficiently informed to judge of the merit or demerit of different items in the river and harbor bill for improvements outside of the State of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the article now read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the article.

The Clerk read as follows:

A PENNSYLVANIA ENTERPRISE.

A PENNSTIVANIA ENTERPRISE.

The Cape May harbor of refuge project, for which Congress may give $1,200,000, is practically a Pennsylvania enterprise. It received its principal backing from Pennsylvanians. The New Jersey Representatives advocated it as a matter of course, but a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee declared to-day that it was Pennsylvania influence that made the grab possible. It could not be learned whether the relatively huge sum thus poured into the purse of a private corporation accounts for the niggardly Pennsylvania allowance. It is certain that hard work and influence that belonged to Pennsylvania went for the purpose of building up a yachting rendezvous at Cape May. It is true that Pennsylvania Congressmen individually and collectively fell down hard on every project they advocated for their own State. They succeeded splendidly in their efforts to aid the Cape May Real Estate Company. They failed to get the survey for the Delaware, to secure Dam No. 7 in the Ohlo River, essential in a logical development of the Ohlo and of incalculable value to the vast commercial interests of western Pennsylvania, and to secure adequate improvement to the Erie Harbor and its approaches.

Every one of this trio of fallures injures Pennsylvania. The achievement of Pennsylvania Representatives for Cape May actually represents what the delegation can do when it tries. It reveals what a really powerful organization the State has in Congress. It is a basis for the hope that something really might be accomplished by them for their home State if they got time for it.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I would also—
Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that the gentle-

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that the gentle-man presents no question of personal privilege, and I am unwilling that this should be a precedent in that direction. I am perfectly willing to agree that the gentleman should have unanimous consent to make a statement, but I dislike to have it come in as a question of personal privilege, as it does not present one.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I then ask unanimous consent that I may make a statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How much time does the gentleman desire? Mr. PAYNE. For how long?

Mr. MORRELL. It will take about three minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may have five minutes to make a statement. Is there objection? After

The Chair hears none.

Mr. MORRELL. Now, Mr. Speaker, it was circulated on the floor yesterday and through the halls of Congress that the individual members of the Philadelphia delegation had appeared before the River and Harbor subcommittee advocating this item Now, I want to say, as far as I am concerned, that I personally am wrongfully accused. I never appeared before the general committee of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, nor have I appeared before the subcommittee of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, nor have I spoken to any member of a committee or subcommittee advocating any other measure except that which belongs to the State of Pennsylvania. I never knew the existence of such a place as Cold Spring Inlet or harbor, or whatever it is, until my colleague [Mr. Moore] called my attention to it on last Saturday afternoon in Philadelphia. I confess I was surprised yesterday to be told by a prominent Member of the House that it was considered a Pennsylvania enterprise, and that it would be charged up against the State of Pennsylvania. As soon as I learned this, in company with my colleague [Mr. Moore], I immediately sought an interview with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, who told us that there had been considerable backing from Pennsyl-I then asked vania citizens for the item for Cold Spring Inlet. him whether the granting of this item had affected the amount awarded to Pennsylvania? To which he replied that he "did not think that it had."

Now, what I want to impress upon the minds of the Members of this House is that I had nothing whatsoever to do in any way, shape, or form with urging, directly or indirectly, any appropriation in this bill outside of the items which affected the State of Pennsylvania. In every matter affecting my district or the State of Pennsylvania, I think, my record of the last seven years will show zeal and earnestness of purpose on my part for what was desired. In connection with the improvement of the Delaware River, from the time I first became a Member of this distinguished body, my efforts have been unrelaxing, and have left no stone unturned to obtain what was desired by the people of Philadelphia and the State of Pennsylvania.

The amount carried in the present bill for the Delaware River, double that estimated for by the engineer in charge, and the enlarging of the original scheme by widening, I may safely say, are due to the unremitting efforts of the Philadelphia delegation, and I think that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is prepared to prove that the statement that "in the meantime not a cog is turning for the Delaware" is, at least, somewhat unwarranted.

DAM ACROSS THE PEND D'OREILLE RIVER.

Mr. JONES of Washingon. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 24760) authorizing the construction of a dam across the Pend d'Oreille River, in the State of Washington, by the Pend d'Oreille Development Company, for the development of water power, electrical power, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr.

JONES asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GRIGGS] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Georgia Southwestern and Gulf Railroad Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Georgia, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the Chattahoochee River at or near Steammill, in Decatur County, in the State of Georgia, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman explain the bill, giving a brief statement of what the bill seeks to do.

Mr. GRIGGS. It does not seek anything in the world except to build a bridge across the Chattahoochee River.
Mr. PAYNE. I did not hear what it was.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Griggs, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

R. 19752) amending section 10 of the act approved March 3, 1905, providing for an additional division in the seventh district of Illinois and an additional term of court at the city of Quincy, and ask that the amendment be read only, as it is in the nature of a substitute for the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill and asks that the amendment in the nature of a substitute be read in lieu of the bill. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

That an additional term of the circuit and district courts in and for said southern district of Illinois shall be held at the city of Quincy on the first Monday of March of each year.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know what the bill does.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] yield?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes, sir; I yield to the gentleman for a ques-

Mr. MANN. I wanted some information as to what this bill

as. It seems to create a new district.

Mr. PRINCE. The object of the bill is to give an additional term of court at Quincy, Ill. At present there is only one term of court held there.

Mr. MANN. Does it create any additional districts?
Mr. PRINCE. It does not create any additional districts, it does not create any office, and does not create an expense of one cent to the Government.

Mr. MANN. There was a statement made in reference to it that it created an additional district.

Mr. PRINCE. No, sir; it does not. Mr. MANN. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 24815—the agricultural appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF ENTOMOLOGY.

Salaries, Bureau of Entomology: One Entomologist, who shall be chief of Bureau, $3,500; one chief clerk, $1,800; four clerks class 2, $5,600; one artist, $1,400; three clerks class 1, $3,600; five clerks at $1,000 each, $5,000; one messenger, $840; one messenger, $720; in all, $22,460.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to the language "$3,500," in lines 12 and 13 of page 49. That is an increase of salary

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of der. That strikes out the provision for "one Entomologist, at $3,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.
Mr. WADSWORTH. I now move to amend by inserting "One Entomologist, who shall be chief of Bureau, $3,250."

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in lines 11 and 12 the words "One Entomologist, who shall be chief of Bureau, $3,250."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Entomological investigations: General expenses, Bureau of Entomology: Promotion of economic entomology; investigating the history and habits of insects injurious and beneficial to agriculture, horticulture, and arboriculture; ascertaining the best means of destroying those found to be injurious, including an investigation into the ravages of insects affecting field crops; investigations of the insects affecting small fruit, shade trees, and truck crops, forests and forest products and stored products; investigation of insects in relation to diseases of men and domestic animals, and as animal parasites; miscellaneous insect investigations, including the introduction of beneficial insects, quarantine work, and the study of fungous and other diseases of insects; for the expenses of insect laboratory, collections, and experimental garden; investigations in apiculture and in silk culture; investigations of insecticides and insecticide machinery; purchase of chemicals, insecticide apparatus, and other materials, supplies, and instruments required in conducting such experiments and investigations; for the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in conducting experiments in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and in collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such experiments; freight and express charges and necessary traveling expenses; rent of buildings; for office fixtures and supplies, telegraph and telephone services; gas and electric current; preparing, illustrating, and publishing the results of the work of the Bureau, $75,000.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to raise the point of order against the clause—

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is being raised.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I desire to raise the point of order on the clause beginning after the word "products," in line 4, page 50, down to and including the word "parasites," on the same page. Now, I want to make the point of order against the clause, but I desire to do that with the purpose of eliminating from the bill the words "men and," in line 5.

The clause is "investigation of insects in relation to diseases of men and domestic animals and as animal parasites." to get out the words "men and." I want to confine the investigation to insects in relation to domestic animals, not men.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman give a reason for that? It was found that insects are injurious, and the mosquito transmitted the yellow-fever germ. to be investigated by the entomologists? Why ought not they

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The question in my mind is whether I can confine my point of order to the two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks there is no doubt about that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Then I will modify my point of order to apply to the words "men and," in line 5, page 50. I think it is subject to the point of order, because there is no law authorizing the Agricultural Department to investigate insects and parasites in relation to the diseases of men. I think it is a dangerous precedent to establish. It opens the door for the establishment by this Bureau or in this Department of a bureau of human anatomy and physiology, pathology, and therapeutics and the elements of surgery, with which it has nothing to do; and we ought not to start such a bureau in the Agricultural De-It should confine itself to the investigation of subjects relating to agriculture and stock raising, and leave questions relating to medicine and surgery and investigations of insect parasites in relation to human diseases to others. I think the point of order ought to be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, these investigations have been going on for years under the appropriation bill, and have never been objected to, nor has the point of order ever been raised against them. I think it is a part of the work of the entomologist to inquire into insects injurious to man as much as to plants and animals. It was an entomologist, I believe, who discovered the mosquito transmitted the yellow-fever germ.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That was done by a physician.
Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly; he was not strictly an entomologist, but was a man who made a great study of those mat-

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from New York point out any law authorizing this? Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no law authorizing it except the appropriation bill.

Mr. HAYES. I desire to offer an amendment.
Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, before the Chair makes a decision, the law authorizing the Bureau of Entomology does not say what that Bureau shall do excepting investigate the various insects. That is a part of its duty—
The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman produce the law?

Mr. LACEY. Now, if in the investigation it is found that a certain insect does affect animals and the human species, and-

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Iowa the law there on hand?

Mr. LACEY. No; I do not have it; but I assume that there is authority for the Bureau of Entomology under existing law. Now, the question-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be glad to have the law pointed out. A lot of these things have grown up without

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, in the early part of the bill I called attention to the fact that this whole Department has been built up by legislation on appropriation bills. I have been chairman of the Committee on Agriculture for twelve years, and this is the first time that that appropriation has been objected to or the point of order made against it.

I only mention this to show you, as I said yesterday, the un-certain status of legislation on appropriation bills. No one seems to know exactly what it is or how far it goes.

The CHAIRMAN, When this bill was under consideration existed with reference to many matters involved in this appropriation bill. The Agricultural Department has grown up very largely without any general legislation. Many of the provisions in the appropriation bill have been there year after year, but nothing in the general law can be found justifying them, and therefore if a Member sees fit at any time to object to them, there is nothing for the Chair to do, in his judgment, but to sustain the point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I hope the gentleman will not understand me as questioning the justice of the Chair or the technical right of the gentleman from Indiana to make the point of

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair finds no law for this appropriation.

Mr. OLMSTED. With the permission of the chairman, I desire to suggest that all the law there seems to be on this subject is section 522 of the Revised Statutes, providing for one entomologist, at a salary of $2,000 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all the law that the Chair has been able to find, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "seventy-five thousand," in line 22, page 50, and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and thirteen thousand eight hundred."

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to increase the appropriation for entomological work to the amount asked for by the Department. This is a big country, and $75,000 for entomological investigations does not reach very far. There have been some conferences between the Pacific coast Members of this House and the Department of Agriculture in regard to work that we desire to have done upon the Pacific coast. If this appropriation is cut down as the committee desires to cut it down, it will cut out that work. The State of California has never had any work done for it in this line by the Government, and we feel that we are entitled to it. The State of California maintains entomologists of its own, and I do not wish to detract at all from the excellent work that they have been doing and are doing, but the entomologists connected with the Agricultural Department have a much wider experience; and we want the experience, knowledge, and skill which they possess to supplement the efforts of our own entomologists to deal with insect pests which are new to us. I am advised by the Chief of the Bureau of Entomology that without the full appropriation asked for by the Department not only this, but other very important work will be cut out.

It seems to me that no work of the Department is more necessary or more important than this; and while, as a general rule, I do not object to economies, I feel that this would not, in fact, be an economy. Two years ago the prune orchards of Santa Clara County, Cal., where I live, were attacked by the thrips, which is an insect pest new to us, and I think I speak conservatively when I say that 25 per cent of the crop for that year was destroyed. In some sections it was totally destroyed. Our entomologists did not know how to deal with this, to us, new pest and were helpless. This is one of the things that we desire to have investigated.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is California so poor that she can not employ a competent entomologist?

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, we employ two or three, as I have stated.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I understood the gentleman to say that they were incompetent, and therefore you wanted Government help.

Mr. HAYES. I did not say they were incompetent. They are very competent, but they have not had the wide experience of the entomologists of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If they are competent, they ought to be able to deal with the subject.

Mr. HAYES. No; not so able to deal with it as the Bureau, because they have not had the wide experience of the Washington officials. These pests are new to them. Now, I will state that the Bureau of Plant Industry, last year for the first time, sent men out to California to assist in combating the pear blight, which bade fair to destroy all the pear orchards of the State of California; and I am glad to be able to state that as a result, I suppose, of the combined efforts of our own entomologists and of the Bureau of Plant Industry that blight has been checked, if not entirely eradicated, so that the pear orchards of California will, we hope, be saved. I say that the few thousand dollars appropriated at the last session of Congress for that purpose was a mere bagatelle, amounting to nothing compared to the value of the results obtained from it. n year ago the Chair indicated how unsatisfactory a condition I believe the same thing will be true if this amendment is adopted. It is not only in California that there is work which ought to be done, but there are similar needs in other sections of the country. For instance, the rootworm in the grape vineyards in the Central West threatens to destroy the vineyards, and they need somebody who has had experience to combat that pest; and so with the white fly in Florida. should be made to find some way to fight that. In view of the enormous value of the fruit products of California and the Pacific coast, I believe we are entitled to this small appropriation, and I hope the gentleman from New York will not oppose it.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, a moment ago, while the point of order raised by the gentleman from Indiana was under consideration, the broad statement was made that the whole authority of the Department of Agriculture for the study of parasites of domestic animals had grown up out of legislation in appropriation bills; that it was a sort of continuous work, and that there was no other authority. I find in the original act establishing the Department of Agriculture on the 15th of May, 1862, the first section provides:

That there is hereby established at the seat of the Government of the United States a Department of Agriculture, the general designs and duties of which shall be to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word, and to procure, propagate, and distribute among the people new and valuable seeds and plants.

Now, it seems that the last clause of this sentence has struck the average Member of the House of Representativesregard to the propagation and distribution of seeds and plants— and the other comprehensive language, "useful information on subjects connected with agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word," they have entirely lost sight of.

Again, section 3 says:

That it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Agriculture to acquire and preserve in his Department all information concerning agriculture which he can obtain by means of books and correspondence and by practical and scientific experiments (accurate record of which experiments shall be kept in his office), by the collection of statistics, and by any other appropriate means within his power.

And that is obscured still further by the clause in relation to the distribution of seeds, which, it seems, has attracted more the attention of the House of Representatives.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman if the provision authorizing the establishment of the Bureau of Entomology does not give Congress authority to make an appropriation and direct him what to do, providing the investigation was upon the subject of insects?

Mr. PAYNE. I think it fully covers that point. The only way it can cover the point raised by the gentleman from Indiana is to regard the farmers as animals, and for the protection of them the appropriation would be in order. I do not class farmers as animals, and I think the point of order was well decided.

Mr. Chairman, to go a little further than that. In the act passed on the 29th of May, 1884, for the establishment of a Bureau of Animal Industry I find:

That the Commissioner of Agriculture shall organize in his Department a Bureau of Animal Industry, and shall appoint a chief thereof, who shall be a competent veterinary surgeon, and whose duty it shall be to investigate and report upon the condition of the domestic animals of the United States, their protection and use, and also inquire into and report the causes of contagious, infectious, and communicable diseases among them, and the means for the prevention and cure of the same, and to collect such information on these subjects as shall be valuable to the agricultural and commercial interests of the country; and the Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby authorized to employ a force sufficient for this purpose not to exceed twenty persons at one time.

Section 2 provides:

That the Commissioner of Agriculture is authorized to appoint two competent agents who shall be practical stock raisers or experienced men familiar with questions pertaining to commercial transactions in live stock, whose duty it shall be, under the instructions of the Commissioner of Agriculture, to examine and report upon the best methods of treating, transporting, and caring for animals, and the means to be adopted for the suppression and extirpation of contagious pleuro-pneumonia, and to provide against the spread of other dangerous contagious, infectious, and communicable diseases.

And then another section gives permission to the Secretary of Agriculture—or the Commissioner of Agriculture, as he was then—to cooperate with the States to carry out the provisions of this act.

Now, this act is not obscured by the distribution of seeds, and it seems to me there is authority for Congress to appropriate for the purpose of carrying out the part of the act that referred to infectious diseases

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I think the point made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] referred to an investigation of insects injurious to man.

Mr. PAYNE. That is true, and I so stated, and I thought that point might be well taken; but the statement was made in connection with that that this matter had grown up out of the annual appropriation bill from year to year. Instead of that being true, it is authorized by this law.

Mr. OLMSTED. I was unable to hear the reading of the statute, and ask the gentleman from New York if it is his understanding from the statute he read that it does authorize this appropriation for the investigation of insects in their relation to animals, but not in relation to diseases of man?

Well, it says for farm animals, and I do not Mr. PAYNE.

class man as a farm animal.

Mr. OLMSTED. Then it does authorize it, in the gentleman's judgment, as it stand now relating to farm animals.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES], I want to call the attention of the committee to the growth of that Bureau in the last ten years. In 1896 and 1897 the appropriation was $29,500. It remained at that figure until 1899, when it was increased to $30,700, then to $33,200, then to $57,450, then to $77,450, then to $82,450, then to $84,470 then to $94,610, and this bill carries $97,460, so that it has more than trebled in ten years. In addition to that, whenever there is an emergency arising, like the cotton-boll weevil in the South and the gypsy moth in New England, we have allowed emergency appropriations in large figures—over $100,000—and this bill carries for the Bureau of Entomology, for further investigation into the cotton-boll weevil, an item of $50,000, and $150,000 for the gypsy moth. Mr. Chairman, in our hearings we developed the fact that this Bureau has twenty-four entomologists at work in Texas and Louisiana on the cotton-boll weevil. I am not a scientist, but I can not imagine, as a business man, how twenty-four entomologists can be kept at work all through the winter months to any advantage when all insects are hibernating. When the gentleman asks for an increase to have an entomologist sent to California to make certain investigations in cooperation with the State entomologists, I do claim that the Department certainly could send some of the men who are now at work in Texas. The other day the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Bates] went over to the Department and asked them to send an entomologist to the western part of Pennsylvania to investigate a root worm that was attacking the grapevines in that country. The Department already had a man in that section examining some insects that were attacking the apple and peach trees. Yet they said they could not send a man to examine the grape worm without an additional appropriation. To me, as a business man, that seems simply ridiculous.

I do hope that this committee will not grant one dollar more to this Bureau. They have every dollar that they can judiciously use within the year, and if I may be pardoned by the members of this committee for repeating what I have so often said, I hope they will remember this fact in making these appropriations for these scientific bureaus, that this is not the first appropriation, nor will it be the last. These appropriations and these investigations have been going on for years and years and years, and they will go on when we are all dead. The only thing for this committee to decide is how much money can this Bureau expend wisely and judiciously within this year. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from California will not prevail.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth], the chairman of the committee, if the twenty-four entomologists that are now examining the cotton-boll weevil in Texas are paid for out of the special fund or out of this general fund?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are in the employ of the Bureau of Entomology and they are paid for from the special fund, from the boll-weevil fund.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment offered by my colleague will prevail. There is such a thing as crippling a department or bureau by not giving enough money at the beginning, so as to enable that department or bureau to carry on its work properly. Take the case of the gypsy moth, to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth] has just alluded. That was a pest that made its appearance in Massachusetts some fifteen or twenty years ago. A professor at Harvard, I believe, was experimenting with these moths with the view of procuring a cheap substitute for the cocoon of the silk worm. A storm arose and blew down the netting which inclosed a few of the caterpillars of this insect pest, and the moth began to spread. It was some years before it attracted much attention, but the first thing that Massachusetts knew the shade trees and the orchard trees of that State were being devastated by that pest. Ultimately the legislature of Massachusetts came to the aid of the people of that State and made an appropriation for the purpose of exterminating the nuisance.

But finally the legislature got tired of appropriating this money annually, and between 1901 and 1905 it made no appropriation. In 1901 the infected region covered only 300 square During the five years which intervened it spread so rapidly that the infected area now covers 3,000 square miles and extends into the States of Rhode Island, New Hampshire, and Maine. Finally they had to come to Congress, and they now ask for an appropriation of $150,000 to stamp out this pest. Now, it seems to me that an appropriation might have been made giving this Bureau the proper amount of money at the beginning, and in all likelihood the officials of this Bureau would have stopped any spread of this insect pest at the very outset.

There is a pest in Florida at the present time—the "white fly," I believe they call it—which is doing great damage to the orange trees of that section. We have in the State of California probably the largest orange groves in the world. We do not want that fly to be allowed to spread out there and do the injury on the Pacific coast that it is now doing in the other orange-growing sections of the country. We believe that this expenditure of money at this time is in the interest of true economy. It will be much easier to exterminate this "whitefly" pest now, before it has had a chance to spread much far-Otherwise it may become necessary, just as in the case of the gypsy moth, to come to Congress with a request for $100,000 or $150,000 to fight this destructive insect. The amendment offered by my colleague is in the nature of an ounce of prevention, which has at all times been considered to be worth more than a pound of cure, and I sincerely hope that it will be adopted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. One thing in answer to the gentleman from California. I turn to the hearings, on page 426, when we had Doctor Howard before us, and I put this question:

The CHAIRMAN. But there is the State of California. Her greatest interest, you might almost say, is in her fruit industry.
Doctor Howard, Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And I imagine, from what I can get from the data of the Agricultural Department here, that the Agricultural Department is doing more work in the State of California than in any other State in the Union. is doing more work in the State of Camorina in the Union.

Doctor HOWARD. They are doing a great deal.

Description of the Department of t

Mr. Chairman, the Department of Agriculture has undoubtedly entomologists in the State of California to examine the ravages done by other insects, and they will take up this special line of work that the gentlemen from California seem to There is no need for any more money for it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from California will prevail. I feel confident that it will accomplish much good and that no harm will result from it. I can at least speak with confidence as to one item which is embraced within the amend-The proposition is to increase the amount for the Bureau of Entomology some $38,000. Of that $38,000, some $10,000 are to be used for an investigation, or rather for the continuation of an investigation now going on, of the white fly, one of the greatest orange-tree pests that has ever invaded the orange groves of Florida. In the last agricultural bill a provision was inserted providing for the use of $5,000 of the amount placed at the disposal of the Bureau of Entomology to be used for such an investigation. Under that provision work has been started in that State, but with no definite results as yet. It, however, promises much, and the people there, as well as the Department officials, are very hopeful that an effective remedy will be found for this pest, provided, of course, they are not hampered from a lack of funds. Without this amendment the work will very likely have to stop; but if it is adopted, I am assured that $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, will be used for the further prosecution of the white-fly investigation.

Now, as I have said, this white fly is one of the greatest enemies with which the Florida orange grower has to deal, and it appears to be spreading over the orange-growing portions of the State. No means of completely destroying this fly has ever yet been discovered once it has found a lodgment in a grove.

Now, it is estimated that an orange grove when once attacked by this fly will only yield one good crop of oranges out of each two or three; so that the damages from this pest may be seen at a glance. It is estimated, for instance, that a normal crop of oranges in Florida for this year would likely amount to 5,000,000 boxes, bringing some six millions or more dollars, but if all the groves were attacked by this insect we should take off at least one-third of this normal yield, causing the orange grower to lose at least $2,000,000.

Who, then, can say we ought not have the small sum for which we are asking in this amendment, and I have no doubt but that the reasons for adding the residue of the $38,000 to the amount which this bill carries for the Bureau of Entomology are equally as tenable.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have $40,000, I believe, in this bill set aside specifically for the purpose of continuing the boll-weevil investigation; $150,000 for the Egyptian moth, and other large sums for specific purposes. I have no criticism of the bill to make on this score, as I have no doubt but that great good will come of the expenditure of these sums; but while $200,000 and upward are being appropriated for these purposes, it would seem that as much as $10,000 can be spared to investigate, and, if possible, find some means of either destroying the white fly or reducing the injury done by it to a minimum. it has been discovered that a measure of relief can be afforded by spraying the trees with various compounds. Then, too, nature seems to have created some enemies to the insect. parasites feed upon it, and two or three different kinds of fungi have been found destroying it. But these, while promising something, have yet afforded but little relief. So that, among others, it will be the province of the Department of Agriculture to devise, if possible, some means of distributing and utilizing these natural remedies or to discover some artificial means by which the pests can be thoroughly eradicated. I do not think it will require many such appropriations as this to bring about the desired results, but whatever is necessary should be freely given by Congress.

The people throughout the country are interested in the development of the citrus-fruit industry in the two or three States in which it may be carried on, and I feel confident, Mr. Chairman, that no criticism will ever be heard coming from the people against the adoption of this amendment.

The chairman of the committee has informed the House as to the growth of the appropriations for the Bureau of Entomology; how that, in a period of perhaps twenty years, the appropriations have grown from a few thousand dollars until now they are in the neighborhood of some ninety-odd thousands. But Mr. Chairman, is not the question. The question is whether the amount called for by this amendment is necessary. If it is, there should be no hesitancy in voting it, no matter how rapidly expenditures have grown.

I hold in my hand a letter from Doctor Howard, Chief of the Bureau of Entomology, dated since the introduction of this bill, in which he shows very clearly the necessity for the increase, and with the permission of the House I will insert it in the RECORD. I hope, Mr. Chairman, the amendment may be adopted.

The letter is as follows:

United States Department of Agriculture, Bueeau of Entomology, Washington, D. C., January 25, 1907.

Bueeau of Entomology,

Washington, D. C., January 25, 1907.

Hon. Stephen M. Sparkman,

House of Representatives.

My Dear Sie: In response to your telephone request for information regarding the appropriation for the white fly, I hasten to send you the following:

Previous to the beginning of the present fiscal year our knowledge of the white fly was, briefly, that summarized in Farmers' Bulletin 172, copy of which I send you with this. The portion on the white fly occurs on pages 36 to 38.

There was inserted into the appropriation bill last year an item providing that "$5,600, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in investigating the insect affecting orange groves, and known as the 'white fly.'" This appropriation became available on July 1 of the present fiscal year, and one of my best assistants, Dr. A. W. Morrill, was selected to conduct the investigation. He immediately proceeded to Florida, and has since been at work, part of the time with a competent assistant. These investigations have excited interest and approbation among the citrus fruit growers, and I hope and expect that they will be continued to the practical advantage of those engaged in the industry.

The Secretary of Agriculture, in his estimates for appropriations for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1907, asks for an increase to the fund for entomological investigations of the sum of $38,810, for the purpose of conducting certain new investigations and enlarging the scope of other investigations aiready undertaken. In the House bill reported no part of this increase was made, and there is no mention of the investigations of the white fly. While it would be possible under the lump sum appropriated (which is the same as that of last year) to continue in a small way these white fly investigations, the additional sum recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture in his official estimates is greatly needed for the urgently demanded increase in investigations under way and equally urgently demanded tions already under way. Yours, very respectfully,

L. O. Howard, Chief of Bureau.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I believe in the policy of appropriating sufficient amounts of money for the Department of Agriculture to make necessary investigations to discover remedies for insect pests and parasites, to protect the crops and fruits of the country against their ravages, but, after an adequate remedy has been discovered, I believe the Federal Government ought to leave it to the States to apply the remedy. An investigation shows that in the State of Indiana there are sixty counties out of the ninety-two where the orchards are ravaged by the San Jose scale, and the State legislature is now considering the enactment of an amendment to the existing law providing that the State entomologist shall inspect orchards that may possibly be infected, and, where the orchard is found to be infected, to notify the owner to apply the remedy, and if he fails to do so, the State entomologist is authorized to destroy the orchard and charge the expense to the owner of the property; this expense is to be collected by putting it on the tax duplicate and collecting it in the same manner as other taxes are collected. That proposed law embodies the policy that should be adopted in all the States.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield for a moment? Mr. CRUMPACKER. For just a question. I have only a brief time.

Mr. KAHN. In the State of California the pear blight ravaged the pear orchards of that State, and the Department undertook to carry out the gentleman's proposition, and they found it would not work.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is an argument against the policy. If the gentleman will wait until I have finished he may have an opportunity to give the experience of the State of California upon that subject.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe it is the business of the State to apply the remedy. I believe it is proper for the Federal Government to make such tests and such investigations and experiments as may be necessary in order to discover an adequate remedy, but when the remedy has once been discovered, I think the activity of the Federal Government and its responsibility ought to cease and terminate and allow the several States to provide for the application of the remedy. The State of Indiana might as well come to Congress and ask for an appro-The State of priation for twenty-five thousand or fifty thousand, or even a hundred thousand dollars, to assist its fruit growers in ridding their orchards of the San Jose scale, but it is not asking it. do not believe it ought to ask it.

I rose chiefly, Mr. Chairman, to ask permission to incorporate in the Record an editorial published in the Indianapolis News on the 28th instant, on this particular question. The Indianapolis News is one of the cleanest and ablest papers in the entire country, and this editorial discusses the San Jose scale particularly and the remedy proposed in the pending bill before the State legislature, and emphasizes the justice of imposing the burden of the expense upon the men who receive the benefit of the services of the State entomologist. I ask unanimous consent to publish the editorial in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUM-PACKER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD and incorporate therein the editorial to which he has referred. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following is the editorial referred to:

AGAINST SAN JOSE SCALE.

The rapid spread of the San Jose scale in Indiana has alarmed fruit growers and horticulturists generally and all have combined to urge the pasage by the present legislature of more drastic protective laws. While these agree that the future of the fruit industry of the State is at stake, they do not agree on the form legislation should assume. Some think that the present law would be adequate with the annual appropriation increased from $1,000 to $5,000; others think this statute of little value, and that a successful campaign against the scale and other destructive insects can be waged only by the enactment of a new law providing an entirely different method of attack.

The present law was passed March 1, 1899. It came into being as a defensive rather than an actively offensive measure, for at the time of its passage the San Jose scale was just beginning to appear in Indiana. Only a few counties were affected, and in these the scale was found only on young trees imported from adjoining States. The law, therefore, concerned itself largely with the inspection of nurseries and sought to prevent the introduction of the scale by rigid examination of young stock. Nurserymen were obliged to submit to inspection and to provide themselves with certificates from the State entomologist which declared the young trees to be free from disease and pest. But one clause in this law applies its provisions in part, at least, to the owners of orchards or any trees or shrubs infested by scale or similar destructive insect. It gives the entomologist power to order the owner to spray such trees under pain of penalty for disobedience.

During the eight vears under this law the San Jose scale has steadily

During the eight years under this law the San Jose scale has steadily spread, and to-day over sixty counties are affected, and the pest is beginning to appear in other counties. Orchard values have depreciated everywhere, as the fruit growers have been put to much expense in combating the pest. During these eight years the entomologist, although he has observed the annual enlargement of the affected territory, has recommended no change in the law, and until this year has asked for no increased appropriation. He has conducted the work of nursery inspection, and has made sure that nurseries are unaffected, and recently he has made practical demonstration of the approved methods of spraying. In short, it seems that the law has done all it was intended to do—cleaned up the nurseries—but it has not waged successful warfare against the scale in private orchards.

The blame for this failure is placed on the insufficiency of the appropriation. Still no larger appropriation has been sought until now. And if it is obtained this year and no other change is made in the law, the State entomologist will do on a larger scale what he has already done and what has apparently proved ineffective. He says:

"In case the appropriation is made, I propose to get experienced men to have charge of the work (spraying in different parts of the State). They will have their spraying outfits and not only give demonstrations as to how spraying should be done, but actually do the work in infested orchards. This, of course, will be similar to what the horticultural society has attempted, but on a much more extensive scale. Our work would not be confined to the San Jose scale alone, but would be extended to all kinds of injurious insects."

From this it would seem that the State is to bear a large portion of the burden of cleaning private orchards of scale and other pests. Demonstrations are to be made, it is true, and perhaps are of value, but there are, after all, very few orchard owners in Indiana to-day who do not know thoroughly every detail of spraying. If they fail to spray, it is due not to ignorance of spraying methods, but to carelessness or indifference.

It is for such persons that the new bill makes provision. It does this simply and effectively by declaring the San Jose scale a nuisance. For the quicker eradication of the pest it divides the State into northern, central, and southern districts, and provides for a deputy State horticulturist in each. It empowers this deputy to inspect orchards or trees of any sort on farms or town or city lots anywhere and to order the owner to take the proper steps to eradicate the scale. If, after due warning and proper instruction, the owner fails to follow the advice of the inspector, the affected trees are to be destroyed—by the owner himself or by the deputy and his assistants, who charge for the work and fix the charge against the owner's prope

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reply briefly to the remarks of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN]. the current appropriation bill for this year there is a provision that $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the sum appropriated for general expenses shall be used by the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the insect infecting the orange groves and known as the white fly.

I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this provision is omitted from the present bill upon the recommendation of the Secretary himself. In the Book of Estimates submitted to the committee this provision is expressly eliminated and attention called to the fact that it is eliminated. This seems to me to indicate very clearly that in the judgment of the Secretary the work needed to be done in that particular field either has been accomplished or will be accomplished at the end of the fiscal year when this special appropriation expires by limitation. If that work is not all done, all that remains to be done can be done within this fiscal year, in the opinion of the Secretary, and can be done under the general authority conveyed by the appropriation act.

Mr. SPARKMAN. If the gentleman will permit me, I understand that the Secretary recommended that that be left out of this bill because he did not want any diversion of this $75,000, probably thinking it would be too small to justify any such diversion.

Mr. SCOTT. No; I would call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this item was omitted in the estimate. The recommendation that it be omitted was made when the Secretary had no reason to believe that the sum of $75,000 would be all that would be granted. He made that recom-mendation when he expected that the appropriation would be $113,810.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Then he may have thought that if the $113,810 were allowed, he could take care of the white-fly investigation out of that reserve without special direction. At all events, in the letter just mentioned Doctor Howard says that it is necessary and that $10,000 is needed for the whitefly investigation in addition to the $75,000. He says, speaking in reference to this investigation:

in reference to this investigation:

There was inserted into the appropriation bill last year an item providing that "$5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in investigating the insect affecting orange groves and known as the 'white fly.' This appropriation became available on July 1 of the present fiscal year, and one of my best assistants, Dr. A. W. Morrill, was selected to conduct the investigation. He immediately proceeded to Florida, and has since been at work, part of the time with a competent assistant. These investigations have excited interest and approbation among the citrus-fruit growers, and I hope and expect that they will be continued to the practical advantage of those engaged in the industry. industry.

The Secretary of Agriculture, in his estimate for appropriations for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1907, asks for an increase to the fund for entomological investigations of the sum of $38,810, for the purpose of conducting certain new investigations and enlarging the scope of other investigations already undertaken. In the House bill reported no part of this increase was made, and there is no mention of the investigations of the white fly. While it would be possible under the lump sum appropriated (which is the same as that of last year) to continue in a small way these white-fly investigations, the additional sum recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture in his official estimates is greatly needed for the urgently demanded increase in investigations under way and equally urgently demanded new investigations.

Then he goes on to say that he considers the $10,000 necessary for the investigation of the white fly.

Mr. SCOTT. I have never heard that particular letter before, but it is of a type that has grown very familiar to the Committee on Agriculture. With all due deference to the distinguished gentlemen who are conducting the work in this Department along scientific lines, I wish to say that it is very easy for any Member of Congress to get an opinion from any one of them that a special appropriation for extending work in his bureau is urgently needed. But the gentleman will concede at once that in a matter of this kind the judgment of the committee and Congress must rule. The Committee on Agriculture considered all this subject very, very carefully. Doctor Howard was before us

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. SCOTT. I would like consent to continue five minutes

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears

Mr. SCOTT. Doctor Howard, the Chief of the Bureau, was before the committee and was carefully interrogated as to the work he had been doing, is doing, and what has to be done; and everything that he said was given the attention which it merited by the committee. Yet it was the judgment of the committee that the work of this Bureau could be carried forward satisfactorily with the sum which we have recommended, and I very much hope that this sum will not be increased.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I would like to say to the gentleman that his views of economy are very commendable, no doubt, but I think in this instance a mistake has been made. I believe, as I said before, that a full understanding of this subject would lead to the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman's argument is very plausible, of course, and it could be made to support a proposition to increase nearly every appropriation that is carried in this bill. I have no doubt-

Mr. SPARKMAN. I happen to be one of the sufferers from the white fly and know something about it. I know, too, that some measure of relief ought to be afforded as soon as possible. The people are very much encouraged at what has already been accomplished, and I hope that nothing will be done by this House to impede the Bureau in the investigations it is now undertaking in Florida.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman, of course, recognizes that this appropriation goes in a lump sum, and it is wholly within the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture to spend it where the need is greatest. It is his custom to meet emergencies where they exist by diversion of the general fund placed at his disposal. I again venture to remind the gentleman that if the urgency in his State were so great, as he no doubt thinks it is. the Secretary would not have recommended the discontinuance of this special appropriation which is carried in the current law for that purpose.

Mr. SPARKMAN. We are told here, in substance, by Doctor Howard that none of that would be used for that purpose. At least there is a very strong intimation to that effect.

Mr. SCOTT. If he makes that statement, it must be because. in his judgment, there is greater urgency in some other part of the country and a greater danger from some other pest.

Mr. SPARKMAN. We want to set him right, because if that is his view he is wrong.

Mr. SCOTT. That is a matter which the gentleman must discuss with the Chief of the Bureau.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the members of the committee have given careful consideration to this very proposition, and we feel that there is no reason for the increase asked for by the gentleman from California. As far as the Florida proposition is concerned, the bill carries ample authority to take care of that work down there. The bill carries ample authority to take care of the work in California, and, as a matter of fact, the Department of Agriculture is doing a great deal of work already in California.

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is not the lack of authority, but it is the lack of sufficient funds to do the work, of which we complain.

Mr. LEVER. I am coming to that. Now, I feel that the committee report ought to stand. We had Doctor Howard before the committee, we cross-examined him carefully, and we felt satisfied that the amount carried in this bill was sufficient to do the legitimate work of this bill. Now, let me read to you from a statement of Doctor Howard. The chairman of the committee, Mr. Wadsworth, asked this question:

What about this rootworm in grapes in western Pennsylvania, Doctor? Mr. Bates, a Member of Congress, came to see us the other day and said he went down to see you people and that you said you could not do a thing without an additional appropriation; that your plans were all laid and that you could not change them without an additional appropriation. That struck the committee as rather extraordinary—that you had no elasticity to your plans to enable you to meet an emergency or to meet a case like this. What about it?

Doctor Howard. There is, of course, a certain amount of elasticity, and we could meet a certain emergency, but, you see, it is very difficult.

That is the testimony of Doctor Howard, and if this trouble in California is so bad and if this trouble in Florida is so bad. they have the power here and the elasticity in their plans to meet these very cases and cases of that kind. I am usually in sympathy with these increases, but I am confident that there is absolutely no necessity for the increase in this item.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to ask the gentleman from South Carolina if the committee knows better how to distribute this money and how to carry on this work than the Bureau does?

Is that the contention of the gentleman?

Mr. LEVER. In answer to the gentleman's question, I presume his logic would be to allow the Agricultural Department to make its own appropriations and take that power away from

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman does not answer the question. Now, I will ask him this question: Is the gentleman willing to amend this provision of the bill so as to divert $10,000 of that money and provide that they shall use that in the investigation and suppression of the white fly.

Mr. LEVER. I have no objection to that at all, as far as I am concerned.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I appeal to the spirit of fairness of the chairman and gentlemen of this committee that if one blight which affects an industry in this country can command twenty-four expert entomologists in one section of the country, the grape interests of northwest Pennsylvania ought to be accorded at least one expert to inquire into the ravages of the grape-root worm, which threatens an entire industry. the honor to represent Erie County, Pa.; and the city of North East is the greatest grape-shipping point in the world. are some $20,000,000 invested in the grape industry at that particular point. The sandy shores of Lake Erie for mile after mile are planted entirely with grapevines. It is their entire industry, and whatever affects that industry affects all of the people, and if it is wiped out it will injure thousands of families and thousands of homes. I have urged the Department of Agriculture to send an expert there to investigate this grape-root worm, which has decreased the output of this locality some 25 per cent in the last year. I read the answer of the Secretary of Agriculture:

JANUARY 14, 1907.

Hon. ARTHUR L. BATES, House of Representatives.

Sin: I have your favors of January 11 and 12, with accompanying letters from grape growers at North East, Pa., relative to an investigation by the Bureau of Entomology of the grape rootworm and other grape pests in that section, and contents of same have been carefully noted.

noted.

The appropriation I have asked of Congress for the Bureau of Entomology is based on a careful estimate of the funds needed to meet expenses of work in progress or planned, and the entomologist informs me that it will not be practicable to take up new lines of work unless additional funds are provided. If a special appropriation of, say, $5,000, be made for this work at North East, or if the amount asked for by the Bureau of Entomology be increased by that sum, I shall have pleasure in ordering that the desired investigation be undertaken.

Yours, respectfully,

JAMES WILSON, Secretary,

Now, I will confess, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this committee, I for one do not understand why he can not divert one of the examiners, who, I understand, is now, or has been during the past year, in that locality studying the ravages to the peach and apple industries, in order that he may take up this most important work.

But, Mr. Chairman, the one who directs the work-the Secretary of Agriculture, and under him the Chief of the Bureau of Entomology—say they have not sufficient funds to do this.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania state the fact that they have at North East, Eric County, a station for the investigation of insect enemies to fruits and shrubs? Mr. BATES. I have already stated, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that they have a man who is investigating, as he says, and as Doctor Howard says, a particular line of work, that they have had it under investigation for two or three years, and that this man is engaged still in a particular line of work, and they are not willing to divert him for the purpose we need

There was no objection.

Mr. BATES. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to criticise this committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BATES. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman how large an individual industry there is in this grape-growing country? In other words, is the industry confined to small growers'

Mr. BATES. Both. The farmer with 5 or 10 acres has put every foot of arable land into grapes

Mr. SHERLEY. How many concerns are there?

Mr. BATES. Several thousand heads of families.

SHERLEY. How many concerns are there engaged in the industry on a large scale?

Mr. BATES. Some twenty firms.

Mr. SHERLEY. What are they doing toward investigating the trouble?

Mr. BATES. They are doing all they can; but they are not scientists and specialists, and as a knowledge of science in-creases in this country, we ought to have the benefit of that knowledge in coming to the rescue of the grape growers and agriculturists, and that seems to be a further argument for the increase of this appropriation.

Mr. SHERLEY. Are these large concerns employing scientists to help their business?

Mr. BATES. I do not know that they are. Mr. SHERLEY. The point I am trying to bring out is this, whether or not the concerns engaged in growing grapes are large enough and doing business enough to enable them to appropriate funds from their own private business to investigate this matter.

Mr. BATES. Why, the gentleman from Kentucky I am sure is aware that the expert scientists who know of this subject and have ability to investigate properly the subject are in the employ of these very bureaus. They are the men who are deemploy of these very bureaus.

sirable, but they are not available by private firms,

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania fails to catch the point. Government aid may be appropriated in certain cases, but is it not proper to inquire and ask where concerns are engaged in work of such a magnitude as to have plenty of capital to control that work that they themselves should undertake the investigation for their own special benefit?

Mr. BATES. Why, Mr. Chairman, I have just stated to the gentleman that they are not scientists and they can not make these investigations.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman fails again to catch my If these concerns have the means and if the magnitude of the business warrants it, why can not they establish and pay for a scientific bureau to do the work for their own benefit?

Mr. BATES. I have understood the gentleman perfectly. I have just informed the gentleman from Kentucky that the scientists who are capable of investigating a subject of this kind are not obtainable by private firms. Does the gentleman from Kentucky understand the distinction I make?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is not willing to state to this House that the only scientists capable of doing the work are all employed in the Department of Agricul-Surely the gentleman will make no such statement as that.

Mr. BATES. I am not; but the gentleman well knows that the men who are outside the Department and are capable and willing to be employed in such a work as this are nevertheless employed; their time is all mortgaged to colleges and various State institutions. The gentleman from Kentucky knows that he could not go out and easily obtain a specialist in this particular subject to investigate the grape-root worm itself, which is threatening to devastate a great industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more, as I have been interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for three minutes more. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I desire not to be interrupted again, because I think I understand the point made by the gentleman from Kentucky. The men who are engaged in these enterprises in Erie County, northwest Pennsylvania, desire the best equipped men to investigate this subject. These men are or ought to be employed in the United States Bureau of Entomology. I think they are employed there, and these are the men we desire to give us the benefit of their technical knowledge and experience. This Department of this great Government ought to have, and I believe they do have, the best men for this particular purpose. They are not easy to obtain. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this industry, if it is wiped out, or if it is seriously impaired, will affect the well-being of a great number of people who have put all their eggs in one basket, who have invested all their capital in one enterprise. I do not understand why the Bureau can not send men under the present appropriations nor do I wish to criticise the committee. I believe the committee is doing the best it can, but I do believe that as these special emergency calls come to the Department and come to the House of Congress from California, from Florida, from Pennsylvania, and different parts of the country, asking for special aid and investigation, it is the part of wisdom on the part of the Department and the Agricultural Committee and this House to respond in a moderate measure and assist wherever they can assist, especially where their assistance is so much desired and needed. I have the letters and petitions here from twenty-two firms of grape growers, representing a great industry in that section, where, in the arable lands of northwestern Pennsylvania on the Lake Erie shores by reason of the delayed frosts in the fall until late October, grapes by the hundreds of thousands of tons can ripen and be shipped to all parts of the world.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has said that the grape growers in his locality, even if they would expend the money, could not get any expert to investigate this particular worm. Now, suppose we increase the fund here, where is the Government going to get a man to do just that work that he wants done right away? It seems to me that when he has one stationed up there for another purpose, examining fruits and flowers, he ought to be satisfied and not want to increase this appropriation for his express benefit.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has asked no question, and I am obliged to him for his interruption.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BATES. I desire to say that there is no station at this point. A traveling expert has merely been investigating other subjects touching the devastation to the peach and apple industry.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to correct the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Bates], who says there is no station up there. I read from the Secretary's report:

For the investigation of insect enemies of deciduous fruit trees field stations have been established in the spring of 1906 at Myrtle, Ga., and Northeast, Pa.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman this question: Are grapevines fruit trees?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; but entomology is entomology.

Mr. BATES. But I desire to point out that this expert is investigating fruit-tree ravages, and the Department does not recognize grapevines as fruit trees.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then, under that argument, the gentleman would allow a man in a stable to clean a horse, but would not permit him to curry a mule. [Laughter.]

Mr. BATES. Well, there might be something in that, too; if he was only engaged to clean the horse I would not blame him if he did not clean the mule. [Applause.] Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, on the 4th day of January, 1907, there appeared in the Washington Post, a newspaper published in this city, an editorial entited "A free-seed proposal," which is as follows:

A FREE-SEED PROPOSAL.

It is now intimated that an effort will be made in Congress to increase the free-seed appropriation instead of abolishing it. The reasoning is ingenious. In the first place, it is argued that the free-seed "graft" is a fixture. Whether the farmers like it or not, Congressmen have long exercised the sovereign privilege of distributing worthless garden seeds to their constituents, and they propose to cling to the ancient right. Now it is suggested that this appropriation be left as it is, and that an additional sum be appropriated for the purpose of procuring and distributing really rare and valuable seeds, as was contemplated when the first free-seed appropriation was made. In this manner, it is said, both Congress and the public will be served, and everybody will be happy.

The whole free-seed business is a disgrace to Congress and a reproach to the farmers of the country. Petitions by the thousand have been filed in both Houses, protesting against making further appropriations for such purposes. The seeds distributed are declared to be worthless in many cases. When not actually worthless, they are not rare or valuable, and even if records were kept of the results of their cultivation nothing of value would be ascertained. But it is impossible to induce any considerable number of farmers or others to report the result of their cultivation, upon which to determine the relative value of seeds. The free-seed distribution has been proved to be practically valueless. But it is supposed by some politicians to be politically helpful. This presumption is probably as erroneous as the assumption that science can reap benefit from reports on the cultivation of "garden sass." The farmers of this country long ago passed from the class of hayseeds. They are not to be hoodwinked or "soft-soaped" by the gift of a few seeds. They are far more likely to turn around and vote against a Congressman who places such an estimate upon their intelligence.

against a Congressimal who places against a Congressimal who places are gence.

The proposition to increase the free-seed appropriation in order to carry out the original idea of distributing rare seeds is intrinsically wrong. It would be nothing less than a contribution from the Treasury to the electioneering expenses of Members of Congress—and foolish expenses at that. Let the whole rotten business be pitched overboard and forgotten as quickly as possible.

On yesterday, the 29th day of January, 1907, in the same paper there appeared another editorial entitled "Free-seed distribution," which is as follows:

FREE-SEED DISTRIBUTION.

The debate in the House on the subject of free seeds has thrown much new light on a subject that has perhaps been purposely darkened by conflicting interests. It is evident that Members of Congress are trying in good faith to provide for the distribution of valuable tested seeds in response to a genuine demand from all parts of the country. The safeguards which have been thrown about the free-seed distribution during this debate and the probable improvement that will be made during further discussion leave the appropriation free from the objectionable features which caused most of the public condemnation. Nobody, so far as we are aware, is opposed to the distribution of really valuable, tested seeds to bone fide farmers for the purpose of causing two blades to grow where one grew before, or to introduce into this country new and valuable plants. Instead of meeting with public ridicule and protest, Congress will find its action approved if it so contrives its legislation as to secure this result. Abundant evidence is available of the great good accomplished by the Department of Agriculture in this branch of work. Some of the great agricultural and horticultural products of the country are the outgrowth of research and experiment by the Department, followed by widespread distribution of seeds and cuttings.

Congress will doubtless improve the free-seed provision by making certain that the seeds sent to individuals shall be tested and that greater care shall be exercised than heretofore in obtaining reports of the experiments conducted in various parts of the country under varying conditions. If the Government is able to find a new and valuable plant anywhere, the discovery belongs to every farmer in the country, and he should be given an opportunity to avail himself of it if he desires.

In the first editorial I find the following: The debate in the House on the subject of free seeds has thrown much

In the first editorial I find the following:

The whole free-seed business is a disgrace to Congress and a reproach to the farmers of the country. * * * Let the whole rotten business be pitched overboard and forgotten as quickly as possible.

In the second editorial, which I read as a deadly parallel, we find the following:

The debate in the House on the subject of free seeds has thrown much new light on a subject that has perhaps been purposely darkened by conflicting interests. * * * Nobody, so far as we are aware, is opposed to the distribution of really valuable, tested seeds to bona fide farmers for the purpose of causing two blades to grow where one grew before, or to introduce into this country new and valuable plants.

Mr. Chairman, I read this to show how the editorial mind of one of the greatest papers in the country can change while you wait, and, further, as a testimonial from one of the ablest edited papers in the country that Congress does sometimes know a few things and can enlighten even so great a source of information as the Post. [Applause.] I hope that those papers which so industriously copied the first editorial, in which it was charged that Congress had discussed that Congress had discussed the congress and discussed the congress had discussed the congress and discussed the congress and discussed the congress had discussed the congress and discussed th that Congress had disgraced itself and also the farmers, and which demanded that the whole "rotten business" be pitched overboard, will also copy the second editorial. It will show both to the people and to Congress just how much weight should be attached to editorials when they are written on the side of great special interests. The papers are no doubt furnished by those interests with information, or alleged information, bearing only on one side of the question, while the people, having no lobby to represent them and no money to spend on newspapers in having facts published bearing on their side of the question, are often charged with being either grafters or as being too ignorant to really know their own interests.

If the able editor of the Post had read the debates on this question in this House when this bill was considered a year ago, he would have learned that everything in the way of safeguards and tests of seeds was fully disclosed and that nothing really new was developed in the discussion of this measure at this session.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I will not detain the House but a moment or two, but I desire to correct one or two misapprehensions that the House may labor under. If I am not correct, these gentlemen on the Committee on Agriculture of course can correct me; but my understanding is, Mr. Chairman, that the Secretary of Agriculture recommended to the committee some $38,000 more in this item than has been reported. then, the House understanding that, I want to read this letter from Doctor Howard to my colleague [Mr. Sparkman].

In response to your telephone request for information regarding the appropriation for the white fly, I hasten to send you the following:

Previous to the beginning of the present fiscal year our knowledge of the white fly was, briefly, that summarized in Farmers' Bulletin 172, copy of which I send you with this. The portion on the white fly occurs on pages 36-38. There was inserted into the appropriation bill last year an item providing that "$5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in investigating the insect affecting orange groves and known as the 'white fly.' This appropriation became available on July I of the present fiscal year, and one of my best assistants, Dr. A. W. Morrill, was selected to conduct the investigation. He immediately proceeded to Florida, and has since been at work, part of the time with a competent assistant. These investigations have excited interest and approbation among the citrus-fruit growers, and I hope and expect that they will be continued to the practical advantage of those engaged in the industry.

The Secretary of Agriculture, in his estimates for appropriations for the fiscal year beginning July, 1907, asks for an increase to the fund for entomological investigations of the sum of $38,810, for the purpose of conducting certain new investigations and enlarging the scope of other investigations already undertaken. In the House bill reported no part of this increase was made, and there is no mention of the investigations of the winter fly. While it would be possible under the lump sum appropriated (which is the same as that of last year) to continue in a small way these white fly investigations, the additional sum recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture in his official estimates is greatly needed for the urgently demanded increase in investigations. Should this amount be appropriated the Bureau will be able to give more attention to the white-fly problem and to hasten the attainment of practical results.

I want the Hous

I want the House, Mr. Chairman, particularly to hear this last paragraph, because statements have been made that are not exactly in accordance with the facts. Now, he says:

Senator Taliaperro has asked the advice of the Secretary of Agriculture in regard to the desirability of a Senate amendment, and has been told that should an amendment be made appropriating $10,000 additional to this specific investigation, the money could be well expended, but this sum could not be taken from the standing lump fund of the Bureau without jeopardizing other equally important investigations already under way.

Now, it appears, Mr. Chairman, that unless an addition is made to this appropriation there will be no further investigation along this line, which the Department says has proven so interesting and profitable up to date. Now, Mr. Chairman-

Mr. LEVER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Florida yield? Mr. CLARK of Florida. In just a moment. I want to call attention to a paragraph in a letter which I have received from a very large orange grower in Florida, who says this:

The first amount named-

That is, the amount which they thought would be necessarywas $20,000, but it was cut down at the suggestion of Secretary Wilson to $5,000. They have two men at work here now, and doing fine work, too. But they should have not less than $12,000 for the next

So, Mr. Chairman, the fact is that the Department recom-mended $38,000 more than this $75,000. The committee cut out the $38,000, and that $38,000 was intended to cover the white fly investigation and the investigation referred to in California. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I simply desire to append to my remarks a communication from orange growers of Orange County, Fla., which is here presented:

Hon. Frank Clark, Washington, D. C.

Hon. Frank Clark.

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: The board of horticultural commissioners of Orange County, Fla., earnestly request your best efforts in procuring a sufficient appropriation for the continuation of the field work in the white fly district of the State, now going on.

We need, perhaps, not to further call attention to the importance of this work. The Department is aware that a loss of over $400,000 annually is caused by this pest, and their presence closes the Pacific coast against nursery-stock shipments from the whole Gulf coast of the United States. Florida has special advantages for raising nursery stock, and she has lost this entire trade on account of the white fly.

The appropriation for the present year is sufficient to lay a good foundation for the thorough investigation, and progress is being made. Professor Morrill, of the Department, is here now doing good and efficient work. The needed work for another year can not be done with less than $12,000, and more could be used to good advantage. These estimates are based on a careful study by this board on the entire situation, and the statements made herein we believe will be fully sustained by the Bureau of Ethnology at Washington. It is especially important that the fund should be available at once.

We therefore most earnestly beg that you give this matter your prompt attention and take such action as you think best in the premises.

Very respectfully submitted.

Very respectfully submitted.

E. H. WALKER, Chairman, THEO. L. MEAD, Secretary, W. L. STORY, JOHN A. SMITH, GEO. H. FERNALD, Commissioners.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I only desire to consume half a moment. I desire no controversy with the gentleman from New York, but I only desire to say most positively that this Bureau has never spent one dollar in the State of California. I desire further to state, if the Department of Agriculture has spent anything on the horticultural interests of California until last year, when that small appropriation was made to study the pear blight, I do not know of it.

They have never spent any money in California.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I quoted what Doctor Howard said. I do not know.

Mr. HAYES. I do know. I know that none has been spent. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that the value of the fruit products of California, according to the last census, amounted to $28,-More than one-half of this value is to be credited to the deciduous fruits of the State. The following small table will show more in detail the facts as to this great industry:

The deciduous fruit interests of California.

Name of fruits and nuts.	Number of trees.	Acreage.	Rank of California with other States.
Apple	2, 878, 169 4, 244, 384	31,868 47,159	Produces 97 per cent of all in United States.
Cherry	686, 891	7,632	Eighth.
*	7, 472, 393	83, 025	Third in number of trees; first in production of fruit.
Pear Plums and prunes	2,512,890 9,823,713	27, 921 109, 152	First, producing more than 50
Almonds	1,601,947	17,799	per cent. First, and produces all in United Walnuts			10,619,975 pounds.

Total	29, 219, 387	324, 556	20 per cent of total product of United States.

Total number of vines, 90,686,458. Ranks first, and produces three times more than New York, which ranks second.

Total annual value of deciduous fruit products of California, exclusive of vines, according to the census of 1900, $14,526,786, 20 per cent of all produced in the United States.

Total annual value grapes produced in California, according to census of 1900, $5,622,825, 35 per cent of all produced in the United States. Total value of canned fruits produced in 1906 in California, according to statement of the California Canners' Association, about $25,000,000.

This industry is possibly 25 or even 50 per cent greater today than it was in 1900, and in view of the enormity of the in-terests involved, I think we are entitled to some consideration, especially since we have never had any assistance heretofore. Now, Mr. Chairman, what we ask, so far as California is concerned, is in the spirit of the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER]. We only ask that these entomologists of the United States help us to find the remedy for our pests. That is all we want. We will apply it, and we will pay the expense of doing so. We only want them to help us to find the remedy, because in some cases our entomologists have not yet been able to find it. Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope that we may have a vote.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. Hayes].

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HAYES. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 31. Mr. LAMB. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. Hayes and Mr. Lamb took their places as tellers. The committee again divided; and the tellers announcedayes 75, noes 36,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH (pending the count). I understood that the first vote was in favor of the amendment and those now voting are against it. I am inclined to think that some gentlemen went through here under a misapprehension. Quite a num-ber of gentlemen went through here that voted "aye" when they intended to vote "no."

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. James] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, after the word "including," in line 6. page 50, the words:
"Tobacco worms and tobacco insects in the dark-tobacco district of Kentucky and Tennessee."

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I merely wanted to say a few words relative to that amendment. The amendment, as the committee will observe, does not seek to-

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is absolutely unnecessary. covered by the powers granted to the entomologists, and if the gentleman from Kentucky will listen I will convince him of that fact. It says:

Entomological investigations: General expenses, Bureau of Entomology: Promotion of economic entomology; investigating the history and habits of insects injurious and beneficial to agriculture, horticulture, and arboriculture; ascertaining the best means of destroying those found to be injurious, including an investigation into the ravages of insects affecting field crops.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered to the bill now under consideration reads as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "including," in line 6, page 50, the words "tobacco worms and tobacco insects in the dark-tobacco district of Kentucky and Tennessee."

I want to say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wads-WORTH] that I have read the provisions of the bill, and in my judgment it does not include tobacco worms and tobacco insects. If it does, the Agricultural Department has never so construed it, or, to say the most of it, no part of this appropriation has ever been expended along this line, and as this sum of $125,000 is to be expended for purposes of this character I do not see any good reason why the people of the dark-tobacco region of Kentucky and Tennessee should not have some benefit from it. The Government has expended thousands of dollars in having scientists make experiments attempting to kill the Mexican cotton boll weevil and prevent its appearance in the Southern States to preserve the cotton crop; this money has been expended in fighting the gypsy and the brown-tail moth in Massachusetts; it has been used in war upon the mosquito, and upon cattle ticks to prevent cattle from catching the southern cattle fever, and this amendment which I have offered directs the attention of scientists and experimenters to the dark-tobacco patch in an effort to discover some way to help the tobacco growers of this region in their fight against the ravages of tobacco worms and tobacco insects.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that no more deserving people inhabit this Union than those patient, long-suffering, hardworking farmers of the dark tobacco region of Kentucky and Tennessee. They not only have to fight the ravages of tobacco worms and tobacco insects in crop time, toiling through the field, plant by plant, to pull these worms off with their own hands and till it in order to preserve their crops, but they have a more insidious, a more cowardly, a more destructive foe to meet even than tobacco worms and tobacco insects. foe is the tobacco trust, which attempts to destroy the price of the farmer's tobacco when he brings it to market. This trust has been feeding and fattening on the tobacco growers for the last few years. In all the towns of the dark tobacco region only a few years back there were many purchasers and contending buyers for the farmers' tobacco, but the trust went into this region, bought up all these independent and contending factories and consolidated them, and where once were contending buyers and that rivalry which an open and un-stifled market always gives was transformed into a trust stifled market always gives was transformed into a trust market with idle houses, empty barns, and only one purchaser for the farmers' tobacco. They partitioned off the different counties and sent out their buyers, and one purchaser would not invade another's territory; all of them were acting for the same head. This stifled the law of supply and demand; they fixed absolutely, arbitrarily, the price the farmer had to take for his tobacco. And so this condition continued with the demand for dark tobacco better in foreign countries than it had come the proper of the price of dark tobacco days. ever been before. They forced the price of dark tobacco down to the miserably low sum of not more than $3.50 per 100 pounds. They were enabled to do this—that is, to organize this tobacco trust—largely by the aid of the Government itself. This Republic, that all our people love, places a tax of 6 cents per pound on the farmers' tobacco, and it can not be sold to the consumer by any person until the tax of 6 cents a pound is first paid to the Government. In this manner the farmer was denied the market he would have for his tobacco if it were not for this tax. The best smoking tobacco in the world is home-spun, or, as we call it, "home-made" tobacco, as it is the best chewing tobacco. And thousands and millions of people all over the South prefer this tobacco to the adulterated manufactured tobacco that is put up in sacks and mixed with other ingredients. But as it is now, the trust is the only purchaser. If this tax of 6 cents per pound were removed from tobacco in the "hand," even a great market in this country would be afforded.

The farmers could sell it by retail to the thousands of people who would use it, and this would destroy the trust, because it would force the trust to pay the farmer a living price for his tobacco. A bill was introduced in the Fifty-eighth Congress providing for the removal of this tax. Hearings were had on this question before the great Committee on Ways and Means, and after a thorough and complete hearing on the whole question a bill was presented to the House taking off the tax of 6 cents per pound upon tobacco in the "hand," and it passed the House without a dissenting vote. It went to the Senate and was referred to the Finance Committee, and there it died. Again, in this Congress, the Fifty-ninth, the same bill was reintroduced, referred to the same committee, presented to the House of Representatives, and of these 386 Members, fresh from the people, not one man could be found who had an objection to urge against the passage of such righteous legislation. Again this bill made its way to the Senate, and the hopes of the farmers were high. They saw, as they thought, the breaking of a new dawn, the realization of their hopes that the Government was going to withdraw its aid from the trust. The bill was referred to the Finance Committee of the Senate, and there it So twice this bill has passed through the House of Representatives, and the Senate has been the rock against which their hope for relief has been wrecked. Why should this tax not be removed? Tobacco is the only thing grown out of the earth by the farmer which he is denied the right to have sold without first paying a tax to the Government. The farmer harvests his wheat and grinds it into flour and sells it; no tax is required; he cuts his cane and grinds it into molasses and sells it; no tax is demanded; he plants his cotton and gins it, and no tax is demanded; he cuts his bemp and makes it into rope; nothing is said about any tax; he takes his corn to the mill and grinds it into meal, and revenue officer holds out no hand de-But tobacco, the hardest of all agricultural manding tax. products to raise, requiring more labor, that of the entire year, is brought to market, and when the farmer goes to have sold this tax is required. This tax is the greatest ally that the trust has, and can anyone urge in common fairness that it is a just The money from the tax upon hand tobacco turned into the Treasury amounts to practically nothing. Therefore as a revenue producer it is of no aid to the Government whatever. Then the only purpose and the only benefit it could possibly be said to have is the benefit to the trust and in denying competition in the purchase of the farmer's tobacco.

The tobacco produced in the dark-tobacco region, for which I offer this amendment, is now sold as export tobacco. These unbearable and awful conditions that have prevailed there have been partially met, but met only by the farmers themselves. They saw the price of their tobacco forced by this trust down to where they could not make meat and bread for their families. have appealed to Congress for remedial legislation by repealing this tax, and that appeal, I regret to say, has been in vain. They knew that tobacco was the most universally used stimulant and narcotic in the world. They knew that as the population of the country increased the demand for tobacco increased. They knew that a radius of 150 miles square in Kentucky and Tennessee constituted the only soil upon the earth which would grow dark tobacco. They knew that the earth which would grow dark tobacco. They knew that the revenues of most of the countries of Europe were derived largely from the tobacco which they grew. They knew that the revenue derived from the sale of this tobacco in European countries was about an average of $1.28 per pound. They knew that in some of these countries across the sea the governments themselves sold this tobacco and derived their revenues therefrom. They reasoned to themselves that the only hope for them was to organize and pool their tobacco and sell it directly to the foreign countries without consulting the trust. These farmers met and organized and commenced this warfare on the trusts in defense of themselves. They have succeeded to some extent, and, I may say, to a very great extent, in helping themselves. If this great Government would only treat them fairly by removing the tax, the tobacco trust would be destroyed and the tobacco growers of the dark patch would call you blessed. The tax upon this tobacco was originally a war measure. Up to the civil war no tax was on tobacco. The tax was increased to 12 cents a pound during the war with Spain. It was reduced from 12 cents to 6 cents per pound after the war closed, but this gave no relief to the farmer, as the o cents which was taken off only went to the benefit of the trust. The trust, which was selling manufactured tobacco and paying about $40,000,000 a year to the Government, when the tax was reduced to 6 cents, never lowered the price of tobacco in the slightest degree to the consumer. By this legislation the trust was re-lieved from paying $40,000,000 a year on tobacco and had to pay only $20,000,000. Thus it was to their advantage to the sum of $20,000,000 that the last legislation resulted.

Mr. Chairman, the farmers of my country ask no legislative aid to enhance the price of their tobacco. They are quite aware that manufacturers from whom they have to buy have the prices of their products enhanced by a high protective tariff that shuts out competition and that the amount of this tariff | them, I want this Congress to adopt it. This House has done is added to the price of the article, and when they purchase these articles, which are the necessaries of life, they are required to pay this tax. Groaning and protesting against this wrong, they loudly proclaim the unrighteousness of a law that is a tax upon their tobacco and which enables the trust to fix the price for which they have to sell. For the manufacturer you place a tariff tax to make his product sell high, for the tobacco farmer you place a tax to make his product sell low. All they want, all they ask, is that they shall be allowed to stand out in that market—which is older than protective tariff, older than the rapacity of the trust, as old as civilization itself—the open market of supply and demand, and be allowed to sell their product. They know, Mr. Chairman, that a bill has just passed the Senate which has for its purpose the giving of $15,000,000 purely as a gratuity or subsidy to the great shipowners. They know they help to pay this tax. They know it is the people's money, gathered from the cottage and the hut and the home of the people. This is done, as the friends of the measure proclaim, to encourage shipping. They ask no gratuity or subsidy to encourage tobacco growing. They do not ask that you ram your hands into the public Treasury and pull out the gathered taxes of the citizens of this Republic and distribute the money among them. They know such a subsidy, by whatever honeyed phrase disguised, would be by the plutocrats who own the stock in the ship trust denounced as socialism. And yet, Mr. Chairman, I could make out a more righteous case for these men than can, be made out for the ship trust in their fight for a subsidy. Upon the side of the farmers would be their poverty, their hungry families, their ragged children, their thatched roofs, their mortgaged farms, and their wrecked hopes-all would be silent yet eloquent witnesses in their behalf. Those to whom the ship subsidy goes have everything that gold can buy, spend their summers in the cool breezes by the seashore and their winters in the sunny clime of the South.

I would oppose a subsidy to tobacco growers as I oppose a subsidy to shipowners, because the genius of our Government and the spirit on which it is founded and on which it can only be made perpetual is that you shall not take from one citizen for the benefit of another, nor shall you take from a citizen for the benefit of a corporation, nor shall you injure one to aid the other. Yet, Mr. Chairman, under the benign policies that are now in force in this Government the Republican party stands for a tax upon the farmers' tobacco to aid the trust and a tariff tax upon the goods of the manufacturer to aid the manufacturer. It seems to go upon the theory that if you take from the treasury of the people's money to give it to the trust or to a great corporation this they declare to be subsidy or subvention to encourage business. But the fathers of this Republic would call it robbery of the many for the benefit of the few. present policy of the Republican party is continued they will have a new slogan for the campaign of 1908 and will change the stand-pat phrase to the euphonious shibboleth, "Help the rich; the poor can beg;" and this may be supplemented by employing the doctrine "For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance; but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath." The tobacco growers are willing to go into the fields under the beams of the hot sun and bend over the hills of their tobacco and tend it, and sucker it, and worm it, and cut it, and cure it, and house it. They are willing to sweat and work thirteen months out of the year to raise this tobacco; no subsidy aid do they require. All they ask of you and of this Government is that the heavy hand of governmental taxation which is put on their tobacco and which redounds solely and only to the benefit of the trust be removed and allow them to sell in an unstifled market. Mr. Chairman, I wish it were possible for the Members of this House to know these conditions as I do and to see these people who have been forced to want by reason of the heartless rapacity and conscienceless greed of the tobacco trust.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What bill is that? Mr. JAMES. It is the bill taking the 6-cents-a-pound tax off of leaf tobacco.

Mr. BANNON. Why does not the gentleman include Ohio in that?

Mr. JAMES. I am willing to include Ohio.
Mr. MUDD. And Maryland also?
Mr. JAMES. I will include Maryland, and I will include North Carolina, and I will include any tobacco-growing region in the United States.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Pennsylvania?

Mr. JAMES. I will include Pennsylvania. I drew my amendmend making it applicable to the dark-tobacco region of Kentucky and Tennessee, because of my familiarity and knowledge of conditions there, and if there is any aid that can be given its duty in the passage of the bill to take the tax off of tobacco, and I hope you will pass the amendment which I have offered. I sincerely trust that the time is not far distant when the Congress of the United States shall pass through both Houses a bill removing this tax from tobacco, divorcing this Government from partnership with the trust, and these glad tidings will be greeted by these sturdy farmers with joyous acclaim. Mr. Chairman, the farmers of the dark-tobacco belt stand under the flag of equal rights to all and special privileges to none. In the swift battle of life they only ask that in this contest for bread for themselves and their wives and children that this Government shall not be against them. They ask that the Government shall be divorced from partnership with this monopoly, and as this Republic can demand of all citizens alike their lives in defense of the flag in time of war, these men believe, and believe sincerely, that in times of peace the same chances and opportunities should, like sunshine, fall upon all alike. With a cause so just these tobacco growers have hoped and prayed for relief. This cause was so righteous that no one dared to come into the open light and oppose it. They knew the powerful opposition they would encounter, the cowardly stealth of greed and gold, and yet they hoped.

Mr. Chairman, I yet entertain the hope that in the remaining days of this session, which are but few, the Senate will enact this bill into law. It is true it is but half a loaf. The farmers should have the right to twist their tobacco and sell it without tax, but under this bill the only right they get is the right to have it sold in the "hand" without tax. Senate enact this bill, and, half a loaf as it is, it will help to overthrow the most heartless band of pirates that ever pillaged or captured, overthrow a meaner set of men than those who gambled for the raiment of Christ, overthrow a crowd of vampires whose greed for money would drive into penury 3,000,000 struggling people. The Bible tells us that when Gideon was thrashing wheat by the wine press to hide it from the Midlanites, into whose hands he had been cast, that an angel of the Lord appeared unto him and said: "The Lord is with thee, thou mighty man of valor." The tobacco growers of the dark-tobacco region have been cast into the hands of the trust without doing any evil, they have been pooling their tobacco to hide it from the trust, they have trod the wine press alone. Let the Senate pass this law and say to the struggling, ragged, oppressed farmers: "Uncle Sam is with you, you mighty men of valor." With the scientist and experimenters discovering of valor." With the scientist and experimenters discovering a way to exterminate tobacco worms and tobacco insects, the Attorney-General's office busy discovering and prosecuting the men who have brought this condition upon this country, placing the stripes of infamy upon them, the tax removed from to-bacco, the trust denied governmental support, supply and demand again the arbiter and king of prices, then, Mr. Chairman, the people of that trust-cursed, monopoly-oppressed land can My country, 'tis of thee, Sweet land of liberty.

[Applause.]

say, and say truly-

Mr. Chairman, I think the House should adopt this amendment I have offered.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I offer an amendment to come in on line 25, page 50.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama that that paragraph has not yet been reached. The reading closed with line 23.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. The Clerk read "$75,000," and then the amendment came in increasing the amount.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, does the gentleman wish it to come in at the end of line 23?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes, sir.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 23, page 50, insert: "Provided,
That the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used by the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture for the promotion of economic ornithology and the investigation of the foodhabits of North American birds in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry, and for the protection and preservation of useful birds, as provided for under existing law, and to carry into effect the provisions of an act approved May 25, 1900, entitled "An act to enlarge the powers of the Department of Agriculture, prohibiting the transportation of interstate commerce of game killed in violation of local laws."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I reserve the point of order on that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman allow me to offer an amendment to that?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York to have reserved the point of order.

Mr. LACEY. I will ask the gentleman from Alabama if he will allow me to offer as a substitute the existing law?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa desires to know if the gentleman from Alabama will yield to propose an amendment to his amendment which has just been read.

I desire to offer the existing appropriation.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I do not yield for that purpose at this time.

Mr. Chairman, the reason for offering this amendment in this connection is simply this: I was advised and informed by the chairman of the committee [Mr. Wadsworth] that this paragraph, or this Bureau of Entomology, took care of and provided for the functions and the duties of the Bureau of Biological That being the case, it seemed to me that the point of Survey. order would not be well taken; but, however, the distinguished chairman of the committee further admits there is no provision whatsoever made for the protection or preservation of game, including birds. In other words, Mr. Chairman, I want this committee to understand that if this bill now under consideration becomes a law, that it annuls directly "An act to enlarge the powers of the Department of Agriculture, to prohibit the transportation by interstate commerce of game killed in violation of local laws, and for other purposes;" approved May 25, 1900, and I desire in that connection to read a paragraph or so from the existing law which this bill repeals and annuls by reason of the fact that it makes no appropriation for carrying out the provisions of this act, passed May 26, 1900, as follows:

out the provisions of this act, passed May 26, 1900, as follows:

That the duties and powers of the Department of Agriculture are hereby enlarged so as to include the preservation, distribution, introduction, and restoration of game birds and other wild birds. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to adopt such measures as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act and to purchase such game birds and other wild birds as may be required therefor, subject, however, to the laws of the various States and Territories. The object and purpose of this act is to aid in the restoration of such birds in those parts of the United States adapted thereto, where the same have become scarce or extinct, and also to regulate the introduction of American or foreign birds or animals in localities where they have not heretofore existed.

The Secretary of Agriculture shall, from time to time, collect and publish useful information as to the propagation, uses, and preservation of such birds; and the Secretary of Agriculture shall make and publish all needful rules and regulations for carrying out the purposes of this act, and shall expend for said purposes such sums as Congress may appropriate therefor.

That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to deliver to any common carrier to transport from one State or Territory to another State or Territory, or from the District of Columbia or Alaska, any foreign animals or birds the importation of which is prohibited, or the dead bodies or parts thereof of any wild animals or birds where such animals or birds have been killed in violation of the laws of the State or District in which the same were killed.

Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the transportation of any dead bird or animals killed during the season when the same may be lawfully captured, and the export of which is not prohibited by law in the State, Territory, or District in which the same were killed.

Mr. LAMB. I was just going to ask the gentleman if he would not withdraw his amendmen

Mr. LAMB. I was just going to ask the gentleman if he would not withdraw his amendment, as it is clearly subject to a point of order, and the object you have in view could be obtained without that.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I appreciate the suggestion made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Lamb]. I want to make my remarks and then will discuss the point of order if the same is necessary. I admit that I do not care much to discuss the point of order; but I say, Mr. Chairman, that a law of as much importance as this one I have just read ought not to be repealed and annulled in this way.

Its object and purpose is so plainly wise, proper, and prudent that we ought to maintain it. I have asked the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture if it is not true that the Secreary of Agriculture recommended a 25 per cent increase in the amount appropriated in the last Congress for carrying on the biological surveys. I have not received any answer to that question, and I propound it again to the chairman of this committee if the Secretary of Agriculture did not recommend an increase of the appropriation? Silence gives consent. Instead of that the entire appropriation for the Biological Survey has been stricken out, including this important provision in reference to game. The statute I have read does not invade any State law. It stands, Mr. Chairman, in the same attitude to the State, in principle, theory, and spirit, as the pure-food law that we have passed during the first session of this Congress, and from which we expect such great benefits for the public. As the pure-food law, by creating or authorizing the establishment of standards, is intended to aid any State law that is in force for the preservation of the purity of food, so this Federal statute is intended to aid in the preservation and protection of game. It seems to me totally unwise and unneces sary at this time to strike that down and to make no provision for it, especially as no reason is given in the report of the Committee on Agriculture for its action. The committee has not give us the benefit of the information asked for, whether the Secretary of Agriculture made that recommendation of an increase of the appropriation for the Biological Survey. I am reliably informed that he did make it. Yet it is contended that the preservation of game is such a "scientific" question that it belongs to some other Department than the Department of Agriculture. It does not seem that Congress thought so when it passed this law that I have just read, Mr. Chairman, if I understand the point of order, it is that the proposition must be germane to the subject that it is intended to amend. It must have some connection with it; must be of the same family of subjects provided for in the bill sought to be amended. What is this paragraph here? I call the attention of the Chair to it. It is a very well admitted fact that there is no greater protection to "field crops" when they are planted and when they are germinating than a certain class of birds which destroy the "insects" that interfere with the "field crops." In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, the law that I have read, page 188 of the Statutes at Large, uses this language, which it seems to me brings the amendment that I have offered within the purview of the Entomological Bureau provision:

Injurious to the interests of agriculture or horticulture.

Those are the words of the existing law.

What is the bill that I hold in my hand? Why, it is "to investigate the history and habits of insects injurious and beneficial to agriculture, horticulture, and arboriculture.' contend, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment which I have offered, under these circumstances, is germane to this paragraph. It does not say that $30,000 shall be unconditionally appropriated, but it says as much thereof as is necessary. reason can be offered why it is not? The report of the committee makes no statement nor gives any facts. It does not say that the Biological Survey was inefficient. It does not say that they had any hearing about it in which witnesses were examined. It does not say that there was a single witness called on the question either of abolishing this Bureau or of taking from the birds the protection that the law ought to give them. I say it is not only a question of great benefit, but it is a question of sentiment, and we ought to take care of the birds.

As I recall it, but a short time since there was a bill passed here to take care of the birds of the District of Columbia, and I yoted for it with a great deal of pleasure. I am thoroughly convinced that a law of this kind is absolutely necessary. Why? There is spreading to-day throughout all the States of the Union a growing sentiment that the birds and the fish and the game ought to be protected. Only a few days since, in my own State of Alabama, a law was passed, with practical unanimity, pro-viding for the preservation and protection of game.

This law, existing as it does to-day, which the Committee on Agriculture, by refusing to make an appropriation, has repealed, gives Government officials the power, not to go into the States and interfere with the rights of the States, but simply to prevent persons who are shipping birds illegally captured or killed under State law into other States.

Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion? Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes; with pleasure.

I am in hearty sympathy with the gentleman's Mr. LACEY. general proposition, but I should like to call his attention to the fact that the place where he offers this amendment is not the proper place. There are two lines to dispose of yet under the Bureau of Entomology, and then we come to the Bureau of Biology, which has been wholly omitted from the bill. Just at this particular point the gentleman's proposition is not germane, but when we pass to the next two lines I was intending to offer as a substitute the provision of last year.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I am very much obliged to the gentleman for his cooperation and sympathy in this matter, and I believe if the question comes fairly and pointedly before this committee they will never suffer that provision in the Biological Survey with reference to game to be destroyed or un-Now, the reason I offered the amendment at this place was that the chairman of the committee advised me that that paragraph provided for the very thing that I am contending for, and yet there isn't a paragraph nor a word nor a syllable in it that can possibly be construed as protecting game or birds. But, Mr. Chairman, on the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], having made the explanation desired to make, I withdraw my amendment as applicable to the paragraph referred to and ask that the amendment apply to the last paragraph of the Entomological Bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama withdraws his amendment. Without objection, the amendment will be

There was no objection. Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama desires to extend his remarks in the Recorp. Is there objection? There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Olmsted having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7998. An act granting an increase of pension to George

N. Julian;

S. 7917. An act to authorize the Interstate Bridge and Terminal Railway Company, of Kansas City, Kans., to construct a bridge across the Missouri River;

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk, continuing the reading of the bill, read as follows: Total for Bureau of Entomology, $97,460.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will offer my amendment again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest the total ought to Without objection, the Clerk will be directed to change the total.

There was no objection.

Mr. LACEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is new legislation and changes existing law.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. To ask the chairman of the committee one question.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman from Indiana has the

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order until I can ask the gentleman from New York one question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The point of order is made, and I have no objection to the gentleman asking a question.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I want to ask the gentleman from New York, chairman of the committee, if this provision offered by the gentleman from Iowa is the legislation of last year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa? Yes.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I am referring to the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that the gentleman from Alabama withdrew his amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I did, Mr. Chairman, withdraw it until the next two lines of the bill were read, and then reoffered it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand that the gentleman from Alabama had reoffered his amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I did, Mr. Chairman. Mr. LACEY. And I offered the provision as a substitute for the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair for the first time understands that the gentleman has reoffered his amendment, and the Clerk will report it.

Mr. LACEY. It has already been read, Mr. Chairman. Mr. CRUMPACKER. And I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I suppose, Mr. Chairman, I have the right to withdraw the amendment, because the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Lacey] is broader and more comprehensive and accomplishes exactly what I desire.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to withdraw his amendment now?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I do, for the reasons stated. The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama will be withdrawn,

There was no objection.

Mr. LACEY. And now, Mr. Chairman, I offer as an original amendment the substitute which I offered.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And I make the point of order against the amendment that it is a change of existing law and is new legislation.

Mr. LACEY. In what respect?
Mr. CRUMPACKER. In a good many respects.

Mr. LACEY. If there are any, I would like to know what they are.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, there is no law authorizing any such investigation as that proposed by the gentleman from Iowa. I do not know of any law, although I have not had time to look up the original statute authorizing an appropriation for the chief of the Bureau of Biology. I do not know of any general statute that creates a bureau of biology or a biological survey. There may be. Now, the amendment providing for general expenses for biological investigation, including geographic distribution and the migrations of animals, birds, and plants, and for the promotion of economic ornithology and mammalogy, I submit are subjects that do not pertain to agriculture. They do not come within the definition of agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, the original act creating the Department of Agriculture confines the work of that Department to agriculture in its most general and comprehensive sense. It provides for certain bureaus, and I think nowhere does it provide for a bureau of biological survey. I think that is one of the growths, perhaps, that has come up through various appropriation bills. I submit that the investigation here is not agricultural in its nature. It does not have relation to agriculture within the sense of the law. Agriculture has reference in its most comprehensive sense to the growing of grains, vegetables, and fruits from the soil. It has no connection with ornithology or mammalogy. This amendment authorizes independent investigation, including the geographic distribution and migration of animals, birds, and plants for the promotion of economic ornithology and mammalogy. That is its purpose. It does not say it is for the promotion of agriculture, and if the amendment so said it would not bring it within the spirit and the sense of the law. Rather, it is for the investigation of the food habits of North American birds and mammals in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry. That particular clause undertakes to connect simply an investigation of the food habits of North American birds and mammals in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry. The relation of the investigation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry is confined to that particular clause of the amendment

For the employment of local special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required, etc., collecting, digesting, reporting and illustrating the results of such experiments, and so on.

I make the point that there is no law authorizing the bureau in the first place, nor an appropriation for the chief of the bureau. I make the point further, that the investigation authorized by the amendment is not agricultural in its most comprehensive sense. It belongs entirely to a different division of our scientific research investigation. It belongs more to the natural history than it does to agriculture.

Mr. LAMB. Has the gentleman the organic act?
Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have it here.
Mr. LAMB. That is covered emphatically right there.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Let me call it to the gentleman's attention—"or such other birds or animals as the Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time declare injurious to the interests of agriculture or horticulture.'

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes, but this amendment does not connect the investigation with agriculture or horticulture at all. Read the first clause. For biological investigations, including the geographical distribution and migration of animals, birds, and plants, for the promotion of economic ornithology and mammalogy. That is not agriculture. It economic ornithology and mammalogy. That is not agriculture. It is for the promotion of

The gentleman is not reading from the law. Mr. LACEY. He is reading from the original organization of the Department of Agriculture. That was enlarged in the year 1900 by the in-sertion of a very broad paragraph indeed, which, if the gentleman will yield a moment, I will call to his attention at this

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In what law? Mr. LACEY. The act of May 25, 1900.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. What act is that? Is it the bird law?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, we have got a good deal of law for various things.

Mr. LACEY. There is a specific law intended to cover this direct question.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Read the law.

Mr. LACEY. I had the honor to draw the law, and I think it is broad enough to cover this paragraph, because this paragraph has been put in the appropriation from time to time since this law was enacted for the purpose of carrying out this law. It starts out with the statement that-

The duties of the Department of Agriculture are hereby enlarged so as to include the preservation, distribution, introduction, and restoration of game birds and animals, and that the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to adopt such measures as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act and to purchase such game birds and other wild birds as may be required therefor, subject, however, to the laws of the various States and Territories; that the object and purpose of this act is to aid in the restoration of such birds in those parts of the United States adapted thereto where the same have become scarce or extinct, and also to regulate the Introduction of American or foreign birds or animals in localities where they have not heretofore existed, and the Secretary of Agriculture shall from time to time collect and publish useful information as to the propagation, uses, and preservation of such birds, and the Secretary of Agriculture shall make and publish all needful rules and regulations for carrying out the purposes of this act, and shall expend for said purposes such sums as may be appropriated therefor.

Now, under this power has overspiced a Division of Delice of Delice.

Now, under this power he organized a Division of Biology, selected men to carry out the purposes of this act, and an appropriation was made for that purpose. It has been reappropriated, and this is the fourth time that Congress has been called on to make an appropriation to carry out the regulations that have been made by the Secretary of Agriculture.

That is only a small portion of the act. The Chair, I infer, has the whole act before him, and it is very broad and comprehensive in its terms, and this paragraph now offered by me is the one that has been approved by the Congress heretofore as being authorized by this act. Now, if the gentleman observes, we have already made appropriations for various bureaus which are not specifically authorized by law, and this is the only one that is omitted entirely from the proposed bill, and it is fully and completely authorized by law. Now, I understand from the chairman of the committee that this omission was not made with a view of abandoning the execution of this law, but was made on the suggestion that there might be some duplications that ought to be looked into before the appropriation was made. If the gentleman from Indiana will point out wherein this proposed paragraph is not authorized by the act of 1900 in connection with acts amendatory to the original organic act, I will be glad to hear from him and I have no doubt the Chair would.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I can do that.

Mr. LACEY. Of course, if this had been authorized by the original act in the Revised Statutes, the act of 1900 would not

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I can very readily do that. I have the act here creating the Department of Agriculture, making provision for various bureaus and divisions, and providing, among other things, that there be a Secretary, chief clerk, a Chemist and an Assistant Chemist, an Entomologist, a Microscopist, a Botanist, a Statistician, a superintendent, but nowhere is there any provision in this law for a Biologist or for a bureau or division of biological survey. The statute the gentleman read from contains no such provision as that. The organic act contains no such provision as that. It can not be, after there is a statute creating a Department and providing for certain subdivisions of the work of administration, specifying what bureaus there shall be, that a subsequent act conferring additional authority upon the Department authorizes him to create new bureaus without providing for heads or chiefs of the bureaus, and I say it would not give him by implication any power to create bureaus and appoint chiefs and chief clerks in any sense of the term. And, furthermore, if the Chair pleases, the purpose and spirit of the amendment is not within the law from which the gentleman quoted. The object of that law is the preservation of game, birds, and animals. The object of this investigation is to investigate the geographical distribution of animals, birds, and plants and for the promotion of economical ethnology and mammalogy. Where is there any statute authorizing an investigation for those purposes? If the amendment is new legislation in any sense, of course the point of order should be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard?

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary is authorized to adopt such measures as may be necessary. The Secretary is authorized to make such rules and regulations," and he can adopt such measures as may be necessary. "publish all needful rules and regulations." Now, Congress has created a new work for the Department of Agriculture, and the only thing the Secretary of Agriculture has done is to give There was no name given it in the act of 1900, but it a name. it is the thing that the Chair is discussing now and not the name by which it goes. The Secretary having adopted that name and having called the officials having charge of this work a Biological Survey, it is not a change of existing law to accept the name which he adopts in describing it in the report of the Department. In short, call it whatever you may, everything that is provided in this proposed amendment, and which the House adopted in the last session, is authorized by the act of 1900, unless, perchance, the question of the name that is given, and that is not the material thing. I will make one further suggestion to the Chair, and that is that this act is perhaps the broadest under which the Secretary has been acting. Ordinarily we have created bureaus by a specific act. This being a new departure, the power was relegated to the Secretary to adopt such measures as might be necessary to carry out the purposes of Congress embraced in the act; consequently we delegated to him that particular power. It is not an enlargement of the act in any way, but merely in furtherance of it and within its

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. OLMSTED). The Chair would ask the gentleman from Iowa where he finds authority for the establishment of the Bureau of Biological Survey?

Mr. LACEY. Well, the authority would be to adopt rules and regulations to carry out those purposes. He has to make a division, at least, and suppose we provide for a division? Then the question would be, What authority has he to make the division? He has authority to enforce this law and make rules and regulations. He has made rules and regulations, and we have approved of them for three successive times by act of Congress. His duties are defined by this law. The names under which he performs these duties are not defined by this law. He might call him a clerk; he might call him a chief of division; might call him a chief of a bureau; but he is nothing more nor less than the man designated to carry out this law under its terms as authorized by act of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Olmsted). The Chair finds that the act of May 25, 1900, is quite broad in its provisions. It declares-

That the duties and powers of the Department of Agriculture are hereby enlarged so as to include the preservation, distribution, introduction, and restoration of game birds and other wild animals. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to adopt such measures as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act and to purchase such game birds and other wild birds as may be required therefor, subject, however, to the laws of the various State and Territories. The object and purpose of this act is to aid in the restoration of such birds in those parts of the United States adapted thereto where the same have become scarce or extinct, and also to regulate the introduction of American or foreign birds or animals in localities where they have not heretofore existed.

Then it requires the Secretary to collect and publish information as to their propagation, uses, and preservation; and it distinctly authorizes him to make and publish all needful rules and regulations for carrying out the purposes of the act.

Now, this proposed amendment has two divisions, the first establishes a bureau of biological survey, provides a biologist who shall be the chief of the bureau, with a salary of $3,000, and provides certain clerks. It establishes a bureau fully officered. The second division, entitled "Biological investigations," appropriates in a lump sum for biological investigations of the character therein set forth in some detail. The Chair finds that "biology," as defined by Webster, has to do with the "origin, structure, development, function, and distribution of animals and plants," and is inclined to think, and would hold, that the second portion of the amendment is supported by authority found in the act of 1900 and therefore in order. But the first division of the amendment, establishing the Bureau of Biological Survey, seems to hamper the discretion which the act of 1900 confers upon the Department of Agriculture. Whether that act confers upon the Secretary of Agriculture authority to establish such a bureau need not be discussed. The proposed amendment does not contemplate its establishment by him, but by Congress. It is the attempted establishment of a new bureau in an appropriation bill without any previous authority of law. The Chair therefore holds that the first division of the amendment is subject to the point of order, and, part of the amendment being so subject, the Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order against the entire amendment.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I will offer the second paragraph, striking out the words "forty-four thousand four hundred and twenty" and inserting "fifty-two thousand" and leaving out the words totally to the bottom of the line. That would leave the second paragraph by itself, and the appropriation the same, without the creation of a bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. Mr. LACEY. Leave the item as it is, $44,420. I will offer that item just as it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Insert, after line 25, page 50, the following:

"Biological investigations: General expenses, biological investigations: For biological investigations, including the geographic distribution and migrations of animals, birds, and plants, and for the promotion of economic ornithology and mammalogy; for an investigation of the food habits of North American birds and mammals in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry; for the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in conducting experiments in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and in collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such experiments; for freight and express charges; for office fixtures and supplies, gas and electric current, telegraph and telephone service; for preparation and publication of reports, and for illustrations, field work, and traveling and other expenses in the practical work of the Bureau, and to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of an act approved May 25, 1900, entitled 'An act to enlarge the powers of the Department of Agriculture, prohibiting the transportation by interstate commerce of game killed in violation of local laws, and for other purposes,' $44,420."

Mr. LACEEY Now Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman in

Mr. LACEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. Wadsworth] whether he would not accept the amendment in that form?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Just one word. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Iowa, in view of the fact that the portion relative to the Bureau has gone out on a point of order, to omit from his amendment the words "practical work of the Bureau."

Mr. LACEY. In what line? Strike out the word "Bureau" and insert "Department."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACKY].

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Committee on Agriculture left the entire item out of the bill, because in the course of investigation we were informed that there were certain duplications of work going on. Now, I would like the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Davis], who made examination, to state to the committee the reason why it was left out and what action we hope for in the Senate?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Agriculture this year had very extended investigations upon nearly everything contained in this bill. Near the close or at the close of the investigation this question of the Biological Survey came up. They had not given it any special investigation other than the investigation that was had one year ago. The committee was then informed that a considerable portion, or at least some portion, of the work that was being done by the Biological Bureau was being duplicated in the Smithsonian Institution and other branches of the Government. That being the case, the committee thought at that time, and they considered some of the questions that have now been argued by the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Indiana, as to the proper place that this work should be done. They therefore decided to omit the entire appropriation for that Bureau at that time. Since then I have seen and personally interviewed the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, who is particularly interested in this branch, and he informed me no later than yesterday that he thought it advisable for the House at this time to allow the bill to be passed regarding this subject as the committee had seen fit to report it; that an investigation would be had in the Senate when this bill was reported to that branch along that particular line, and particularly along the line as to what particular portion of this work was being duplicated by any of the other bureaus, and that in his judgment it would be wise for the House at this time to pass the bill as the committee had seen fit to report it, and he advised that that course be

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Agriculture does not desire to strike from the Biological Bureau any of the matters they have seen fit to investigate, or one single item that would be of benefit to the people. But as we are informed that there was duplication, which I think has been prevalent in some of the bureaus, we had better leave this out of the bill and let that matter be settled by investigation by the Senate committee. still think it would be better if the House would not adopt the amendment, but act as the Secretary of the Agriculture desires. We do not desire to strike one thing that is beneficial; neither do we desire that two or three bureaus should duplicate the work which ought to be done by one. Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe it is a good example which has been suggested or a wise practice to follow to leave to the Senate or any conference committee to do the work which should be done in this House. I believe that if there is any bureau of the Department of Agriculture that has made good by its work, it is this one. I do not know what they may have done in other States, and how much good it may have done along other lines of investigation, but I do believe that what has been demonstrated through the field agents of the Biological Bureau in the State of Texas alone more than justifies the existence of the Bureau and many times over the cost of I have here a list of some thirty birds which have been found to be destructive of the boll weevil. The boll weevil is an insect which in Texas eats up each year probably from five to ten million dollars' worth of cotton. Certainly a very great contribution to the wealth of this country, which goes to bring up and make favorable our trade balances, is worth preserving. Certainly so great a contribution of science toward the preservation of that great industry and its development as this Bureau has made is worthy the attention of this House. I hope that we will not leave to the Senate nor to conference committees the duty of constructing the legislation which we want. There may be duplication in a small degree of the work done in the Biological Survey and Entomological Bureau; but, as my friend the gentleman from Iowa said to me the other day, the Entomological Bureau devoted its study to the insect and the Biological Survey has devoted its study to the wide work of discovering birds that consume the insects. One is studying the birds and the other the insects. I do not believe that the duplication has amounted to much. But if there be duplication, let the Senate take the time and find out wherein that duplication is, and reduce the appropriation and the work of the Bureau,

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Certainly.

so that it will not go on.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does the gentleman from Texas have in mind the fact that this bill carries an appropriation of $190,000 to eradicate the cotton boll weevil in addition to this?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I will say, in reply to the gentleman, I understand it provides for that work, but it is along an entirely different line; and I must say from my own observation, and from information I have received from farmers, there seems to be more hope coming from the work done by the Biological Survey, and more reason to believe that these birds can relieve us from the boll weevil, than anything else done in any other line of the work of discovering a means to eradicate the boll weevil.

Mr. FIELD. What is the bird or birds that the Department supposed destroyed the boll weevil? Is it the American oriole? Mr. SLAYDEN. I understand the oriole is one of thirty.

Mr. FIELD. Did you ever see an oriole in Texas?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not know whether I would know an oriole if I saw it. But, Mr. Chairman, I will say that they report thirty different kinds of birds in Texas that do consume the boll weevil.

How about the quail? Mr. FIELD.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have not looked up that subject, and I * can not say.

Mr. FIELD. They should also be included in the list.

Mr. SLAYDEN. According to the statement of my colleague, the quail is also a consumer of the boll weevil.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not think it is very important whether we put that in or refuse to put it in. It does not make much difference. In any event the Senate will have to amend it, because we have stricken out the salary roll. fore, to expedite the work of the Committee of the Whole, I hope this will be adopted so that we can get along. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of the paragraph:
"And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to investigate and report to the next session of Congress to what extent, if any, the work now being done by the Bureau of Biology is duplicated by any other Department of the Government, and to what extent the work of this Bureau is of practical value to the agricultural interests of the country."

Mr. SCOTT. I think it is unnecessary to argue at any length the propriety of this amendment. It has abundantly appeared here that there is reason to believe that there is a duplication in the Department, and my amendment is intended to bring a report to Congress which will give us an authoritative statement on that question.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Allow me to make a suggestion to the gentleman. His amendment requires a report as to duplications by any other Department, but it does not include a possible duplication by some other bureau in the same Department. It was said that the Smithsonian had been duplicating work. that in the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. SCOTT. The Smithsonian is not. Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is there any other bureau in the Department that might possibly be duplicating this same work?

Mr. SCOTT. I think not. I think the amendment will bring the information we desire.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If the gentleman had said "Department or bureau" it would have covered it, but his amendment may be sufficient.

Mr. SCOTT. I think it is sufficient, and I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

DIVISION OF ACCOUNTS AND DISBURSEMENTS.

Salaries, Division of Accounts and Disbursements: Chief of Division and disbursing clerk, $2,750; one Assistant Chief of Division, $2.500; one auditor, $2,000; one cashier and chief clerk, $2,000; one clerk class 4, $1,800; five clerks class 3, $8,000; seven clerks class 2, $9,800; three clerks class 1 (one of whom shall be a stenographer and typewriter), $3,600; three clerks, at $1,000 each, $3,000; one clerk, $900; two clerks, at $840 each, $1,680; three clerks, at $720 each, $2,160; one custodian of records and files, $1,000; one messenger, $600.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the words "two thousand," in lines 6 and 7 on page 51, being an increase of salary.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I concede the point of order. It is one of the increases of salary mentioned in the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In lieu of what has been stricken out,
I move to insert the words "one cashier and chief clerk, $1,800,"

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to reserve a point of order against the words "and chief clerk."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I thought the gentleman from Arkansas made the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He made it on the increase of salary. I did not do that.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Arkansas state his point of order?

Mr. MACON. My point of order is against the words "two thousand dollars," in lines 6 and 7 on page 51. The salary is fixed by law at $1,800.

The CHAIRMAN. That point is sustained. Now, will the gentleman from New York state the language covered by his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My point of order is against the words

"and chief clerk." Why is that language inserted?

Mr. WADSWORTH. As I understand it, the point of order is made against the cashier "and chief clerk" in the division of accounts and disbursements.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. Mr. WADSWORTH. The former provision was one cashier, $1,800. We changed it to one cashier and chief clerk.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why did you make that change?
Mr. WADSWORTH. Simply at the request of the chief of the division, in order to improve the service. This man now performs the duties of a chief clerk in fact as well as the duties of a cashier.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will not the next request be to give them a cashier and a chief clerk separately?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not if one man can do the work. Why make two offices if one man can do the work?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think I will insist on the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well, I will concede it.
The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.
Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to insert the following words: "One cashier, $1,800."
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 6 the words "one cashier, $1,800."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In this particular division there is an increase of At present they have eighteen clerks, and in this seven clerks. provision it gives them twenty-five clerks, an increase of very nearly 40 per cent. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York what occasions this rather remarkable increase in the clerical force in that division?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman will readily see that by the passage of the meat-inspection bill and the pure-food bill the accounts of the Department are greatly multiplied. This is the division which keeps all the accounts and keeps track of the appropriations. This is a perfectly legitimate increase to take care of the additional work imposed upon the Department by the enactment of these two great measures.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is perfectly satisfactory, and I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Publications, Department of Agriculture: General expenses, Division of Publications: For the preparation, illustration, publication, indexing, and distribution of documents, bulletins, and reports; for additional assistants, editorial, proof reading, indexing, and other necessary help in the city of Washington and elsewhere; for the pay of artists, draftsmen, and engravers: the purchase of manuscript for publication: for tools, instruments, and artists' materials; for drawings, engravings, photographs, paintings, lithographs, and other illustration work: for electrotypes, and for traveling expenses when necessary; for labor and material required in the distribution of documents, including wagons, harness, and horses, and maintenance of same, and for repairs; for rent of buildings for the storage and distribution of publications; for the pay of watchmen and charwomen; for all necessary office lixtures and supplies; for gas and electric current, telegraph and telephone services, and for such other expenses as may be necessary, $35,000.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee to explain the change in the provisions of this paragraph with reference to the farmers' bulletins. The corresponding paragraph in the old law made specific provisions for these bulle-

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is all done under the printing bureau by a law passed last year. The gentleman will see that in the note in the estimate it says that the item of $98,750 for the farmers' bulletins has been transferred to the appropriation for printing and binding under an act approved June 30, 1906.

This reduction is only an apparent reduction; the amount is carried by another bill,

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. As I understand it, then, the distribution of these bulletins will go on as before?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Absolutely the same as it did formerly; there will be no diminution.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, Bureau of Statistics: One Statistician, who shall be Chief of Bureau, $3,500; one Assistant Statistician, who shall be Assistant Chief of Bureau, $2,500; one editorial assistant, $2,300; one chief clerk, $1,800; six clerks class 4, $10,800; nine clerks class 3, $14,400; twelve clerks class 2, $16,800; two clerks, at $1,300 each, $2,600; eleven clerks class 1, $13,200; ten clerks, at $1,000 each, $10,000; four clerks, at $40 each, $10,000; four clerks, at $40 each, $3,360; ten clerks, at $720 each, $7,200; six clerks, at $600 each, $3,600; two messengers, at $840 each, $1,680; in all, $97,340.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the words "two thousand five hundred dollars" in line 17, page 54. That is an increase of salary.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I concede the point of order, Mr. Chairman. It is one of the increases mentioned in the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.
Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in lines 16 and 17 "one Assistant Statistician, who shall be Assistant Chief of Bureau, $2,200."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Nutrition investigations: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the nutritive value of the various articles and commodities used for human food, with special suggestions of full, wholesome, and edible rations less wasteful and more economical than those in common use, including special investigations on the nutritive value and economy of the diet in public institutions; and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to employ such assistants, clerks, and other persons as he may deem necessary in the city of Washington and elsewhere; and the agricultural experiment stations are authorized and directed to cooperate with the Secretary of Agriculture in carrying out said investigations in such manner and to such extent as may be warranted by a due regard to the varying conditions and needs of the respective States and Territories and as may be mutually agreed upon; and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to require said stations to report to him the results of any such investigations which they may carry out, whether in cooperation with the said Secretary of Agriculture or otherwise, $20,000.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order to the paragraph just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The same paragraph went out last year on a point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Irrigation and drainage investigations: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the laws of the States and Territories as affecting irrigation and the rights of appropriators and of riparian proprietors and institutions relating to irrigation and upon the use of irrigation waters, at home and abroad, with especial suggestions of the best methods for the utilization of irrigation waters in agriculture, and upon plans for the removal of seepage and surplus waters by drainage and upon the use of different kinds of power and appliances for irrigation and drainage, and for the preparation, printing, and illustration of reports and bulletins on irrigation and drainage, including employment of labor in the city of Washington or elsewhere; and the agricultural experiment stations are hereby authorized and directed to cooperate with the Secretary of Agriculture in carrying out said investigations in such manner and to such extent as may be warranted by a due regard to the varying conditions and needs and laws of the respective States and Territories as may be mutually agreed upon, and all necessary expenses, $150,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of or-

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order against this paragraph. There is no law authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate as to the laws of the various States and Territories. The same point of order will lie against this as other paragraphs which have been stricken out. There is no general law for it.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on that point of order. It may be, and no doubt is, true that the rulings that have been made this afternoon on the various points of order, so far as they apply to the general work of the Department, are correct, although they are rather strict in their application. But I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that we are now dealing with the experiment stations, and whatever is done here under these specific appropriations is done in cooperation with the experiment stations. Now, it is clear that we have the general law organizing the Department and the specific law under which these stations are organized and established, and by the terms of this legislation these proposed items are to be judged.

In the first place, these stations are to be conducted in cooperation with and are a part of the Department of Agriculture, and the primary function of the Department of Agriculture, as prescribed in the act establishing the office of Commissioner of Agriculture in 1862, is "to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture, in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word. Then further in the third section of that act it is enacted that-

It shall be the duty of the Commissioner to acquire and preserve in his Department all information concerning agriculture which he can ob-tain by means of books and correspondence and by practical and scien-tific experiments, accurate records of which experiments shall be kept in his office.

By the collection of statistics and by any other appropriate means-Mr. Chairman-within his power.

So much for the general law. But, again, the agricultural experiment stations are incorporated and operated under three specific acts-first, the Wade Act of July 2, 1862, and under this the General Government makes provision for work in connection with colleges in the several States, where the leading objects shall be as provided in section 4 of this act:

Without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in such manner as the legislatures of the States may respectively prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions of life.

That is the Wade Act. The next act is the Hatch Act, which was passed March 2, 1887. This act provides for appropriations of money to establish and maintain experiment stations in connection with colleges established or conducted under the Wade Act. Its purpose, according to its lines in section 1 was:

To aid in acquiring and diffusing among the people of the United States all useful and practical information on subjects connected with agriculture and to promote scientific investigation and experiments respecting the principles and application of agricultural science.

All this is agricultural science, as distinguished from practical agriculture. But, again, section 2 provides "that it shall be the object and duty of such experiment stations to conduct original researches or verify experiments on the physiology of plants and animals," and many other practical experiments and tests, and,

Such other researches or experiments bearing directly on the agricultural industries of the United States as may in each case be deemed advisable, having due regard—and I call the Chair's especial attention to this languagehaving due regard to the varying conditions and needs of the respec-tive States and Territories.

These experiment stations are those for which we are now legislating.

Now, finally the last expression on this subject is the Morrill Act, of 1890, and if words can be found broader in the English language to define and limit the scope of these agricultural experiment stations and the work of the Department in collaboration therewith, I would like to have the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] point them out. After setting out how these colleges and experimental stations shall be aided from the Federal Treasury, the language of the Morrill Act goes on as follows, to define to what purposes the moneys thus obtained shall be applied, viz:

To be applied only to instruction in agriculture or mechanical arts, the English language, and the various branches of mathematical, physical, natural, and mechanical science, with special reference to their application in the industries of life and to the facilities for such instruc

These are the institutions in connection with which these experiment stations are established and conducted, as is shown by section 4 of the Morrill Act.

The Chair will bear in mind first, that this is all under the broad, general powers of the Department to do work connected with "agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word;" second, that it is in the language of the Hatch Act "having due regard to the varying conditions and needs of the respective States and Territories;" third, it is to agriculture and the mechanical sciences in their broad application to the activities and pursuits of industrial life, and to the assistance of the agricultural population in applying science to the various phases of agriculture that this work is directed.

Will the gentleman from Colorado desist The CHAIRMAN. for a moment. The Chair has no difficulty down to line 7, beginning with the words "and the agricultural experiment stations," etc. Beginning at that point we have a provision which authorizes and directs the experiment station to cooperate with the Secretary of Agriculture in carrying out certain investigations. It would seem to the Chair that the real question involved is whether that is new legislation or a change in existing law

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Whether that which follows or that which precedes?

The CHAIRMAN. That which follows, which I quoted, "and the agricultural experiment stations are hereby authorized and directed to cooperate with the Secretary of Agriculture in carrying out said investigations," etc. Now, if the law provides now for such cooperation, then there is no need of it here; if the law does not provide for such cooperation, it would seem to the Chair that this would be a change in existing law.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. I desire to read from one more section, to which my attention has just been directed, and which I had omitted. This is section 3 of the Hatch Act, and gives to the Secretary of Agriculture authority to indicate from time to time such lines of inquiry as to him shall seem most important, and in general to furnish such advice and assistance as will best promote the purposes of this act.

That is again with reference to the agricultural experiment stations, and illustrates the broad powers given to the Department.

Now, referring to the question which the Chair asked, and I want to understand it, I am inclined to think that this language, from the seventh line, on page 64, down through to the language "as mutually may be agreed upon," which I understand the Chair considers obnoxious, is surplusage; but the point of order is made against the whole section, and if a part goes out it carries the whole.

I do not believe it is necessary for us to say here in Congress that the agricultural stations shall cooperate with the Department, because the organic law of their being provides they shall so cooperate and shall be under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture for that purpose. But referring to that which precedes the lines mentioned by the Chair, the general purpose of this irrigation investigation is connected with agriculture and the economic arts in the highest sense of the term, and that work this bureau is doing has become of the utmost importance to the sections of the country to which it peculiarly relates and that I wish to preserve. Now, if the gentleman will limit the point of order to those few lines suggested by the chairman I have no objection.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Colorado yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Certainly.
Mr. OLMSTED. I want to ask the gentleman from Colorado whether, in his judgment, the provision in lines 21, 22, and 23,

"for an investigation and report upon the laws of the States and Territories as affecting irrigation and the rights of appro-priators and of riparian proprietors," is an agricultural experiment?

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Oh, indeed, yes; and I am very glad the gentleman asked that question.

Mr. OLMSTED. You must assume that the legislators are all farmers and the bills they pass are agricultural products.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Not at all. I think that question can be very easily answered, but I am not surprised at its This work of investigation is not, as the gentleman suggestion. thinks and other gentlemen might very properly think from the language employed, a legal treatise at all, but it is a dis-cussion of the practical effect of the law as it exists in the several States upon the tangible right of the irrigator to the water in his ditches, and that is very important for us in the locations to which this applies. It is entirely disassociated from an abstract legal discussion. It is truly an investigation, and the results constitute just such information as the Secretary is here authorized-

Mr. OLMSTED. Is not that more to assist these persons in settling their legal rights as proprietors and appropriators, rather than in connection with agriculture?

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. No; not necessarily and not hardly primarily; certainly not essentially. I will be very frank to say that some of the reports of this Bureau are classics on irrigation law, and there is no law office in the irrigated districts which would think of being without Mead's Institutes, but the primary purpose is by no means a legal one, and it is not a legal treatise, it is a practical treatise on the application of water to the soil as that is affected and qualified by the various State enactments with respect thereto.

Mr. OLMSTED. Now, why should the Agricultural Department investigate the legal rights of parties under that provision any more than the rights of farmers to have water taken out of the streams running through their farms by water companies in Pennsylvania, which is a very pressing question just now?

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Simply because this refers to irrigation in its relation to the application of the water to the soil by the individual appropriators, not to the abstract legal proposition whether under a particular state of facts A's right is inferior to B's right or B's right is superior to C's. The relation of A. B. and C to each other as appropriators and the agricultural propositions involved are the subject-matter of this work. Mr. Chairman, under the five-minute rule there is hardly time to go into this whole subject, but notwithstanding apparent inconsistency it is true that there are a great many very practical, very distinctly agricultural, questions involved here. As a simple instance, what would be sufficient in one section of the country to satisfy the irrigation requirements of a given area might be utterly insufficient in another section of the country. Now, with that fact as a premise it can be seen that what would be an interference with the use by A of water to irrigate a given amount of land in one section of the country might not be at all an infraction of the use by B in irrigating the same amount of land in another section of the country. This is purely an agricultural proposition, and not a legal question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I contend that we had better leave to the Department of Justice the question of handling the construction of the laws of this country, and, as I have contended before, there is no law authorizing the Secretary to investigate or report on the laws of the States or Territories. The gentleman has failed to point it out.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair there can be no question as to the fact that the language "the agricultural experiment stations are hereby authorized and directed to cooperate with the Secretary of Agriculture," and so on, is new legislation.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. The point of order is sustained as to that section, beginning with line 7, on page 64?
The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained and covers the whole paragraph.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Brooks] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

Irrigation and drainage investigations: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the laws of the States and Territories as affecting irrigation and the rights of appropriators and of riparian proprietors and institutions relating to irrigation and upon the use of irrigation waters, at home and abroad, with especial suggestions of the best methods for the utilization of irrigation waters in agriculture, and upon plans for the removal of seepage and surplus waters by drainage and upon the use of different kinds of power and appliances for irrigation and drainage, and for the preparation, printing, and illustration of reports and bulletins on irrigation and drainage, including employment of labor in the city of Washington or elsewhere.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. And taking up again "all necessary expenses," in line 13.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And all necessary expenses, $150,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The question is now on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Brooks].

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words on a subject which is not especially germane to this particular section, but it is germane to the bill and has been injected into it in the general debate. I refer to a proposed pure-seed law. I listened with much interest to the remarks made last Saturday by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] on the subject of adulterated and misbranded seeds. His speech contained very useful information on Kentucky blue-grass seed, Canadian blue-grass seed, alfalfa seed, adulteration of seeds, dead seeds, the dodder plant, the catchfly, and other pernicious enemies to farmers. It would be a valuable document for circulation among seedsmen and farmers, to put them on guard against impositions and fraud. It did not occur to me that he was contemplating the idea of legislating upon the subject until he so indicated in response to a question, and later on offered an amendment to this appropriation bill providing for the inspection by the Treasury Department and the Department of Agriculture of all seeds imported into this country. It appears that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, or, at all events, certain members of that committee, are seriously contemplating the idea of enacting a pure-seed law, for the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn], chairman of that committee, only the day before yesterday introduced a very long and elaborate bill along the lines of the pure-food bill as a pure-seed bill, and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] is substantially a copy of the tenth section of Mr. Hepburn's bill.

I made the point of order against that amendment not so much because I am opposed generally to new legislation in appropriation bills, which is being done constantly, as for the reason that I am opposed to this particular piece of legislation. I quite agree with the gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, that if legislation on the subject of pure seeds is necessary at all, it is necessary for the protection of farmers against adulterations in domestic-grown seeds as well as adulterations and misbrands in the case of imported seeds, and it should be brought in as an independent bill for full and careful consideration, and not be rushed through as a rider or amendment to a general appropriation bill. The Members of the House should have notice of it in advance, and there should be time to consider it carefully and deliberately and pass it or reject it on the merits. I therefore insisted on the point of order, and undertake to give a few of the reasons why I am opposed to this legislation.

First. There is no general demand for it. Our farmers and agriculturists throughout the country are well informed. Their granges and other organizations keep abreast of the times and know the needs of their business. The pure-food law was enacted in obedience to a strong and prevailing public sentiment throughout the country. There had been a continuous agitation for it for several years. The demand for it was imperative, and it was passed in obedience to that demand. The same was true with reference to the meat-inspection law after the publication of the Jungle by Upton Sinclair and after the investigation at the instance of the President. Who de-mands the enactment of a pure-seed law? I have not up to date received a letter or postal card advocating such a bill, and I dare say the same is true of a great many of the Members on this floor. And it is safe to say that if such a law were necessary for the protection of our agricultural interests it would be demanded by our agricultural societies and papers.

Second. A pure-seed law is not necessary. What good will What end will it accomplish which may not be accomplished by the present laws of the several States? seedsmen and farmers can take care of themselves and of their business without the enactment of such a Federal law. The pure-food law was defended and justified perhaps on the ground that impure foods were manufactured, advertised, and went into trade and commerce which were deleterious to health and injurious to human life. The State is always justified in protecting its people from fraud and dangers of that character. The meat inspection law may be defended on the same grounds, for it is in effect a pure-food law. No such argument can be made in support of the pure-seed law. It is not claimed that the health of the people is being impaired, or that the lives of our citizens are being endangered or jeopardized in any way by the planting or sowing of adulterated or even dead seeds. is it claimed that the agricultural lands of our country are being permanently damaged. The substance of the claim and justification of this law are that cheap grades of seeds are sold for high-priced grades. That Canadian blue-grass seeds are sold for Kentucky blue-grass seeds, which are much higher priced in the market That dead seeds are sold for live seeds. That adulterated seeds are sold for pure seeds. That dodder plant seed, catchfly seed, and seeds of other pernicious plants are mixed up with grains and become nuisances to farmers. That farmers and dealers are imposed on and defrauded, and that they pay for what they do not get. Now, the damage in all those cases is monetary damage. It may be measured in dollars and cents. There is no permanent injury or damage, and there is no loss which can not be made good under the law as it is in the several States. Do we need a national seed inspection law or other seed law to protect our farmers against such threatened Certainly not. That trade has regulated and will regulate itself, and the farmer has ample protection under the common law.

The seed jobber or wholesaler is an expert, else he could not continue in his business. He is apt to be a better judge of seeds than the man who would be employed by the Government at a moderate salary. He is interested in the reputation of his house and in the success and expansion of his trade. Honesty is the best policy in the seed as well as in other business, will examine with more care and ability the seeds which he buys and expects to sell to his customers than will the Government expert, because he is naturally interested. The retail dealer is also a judge. It is his life work, his business. He is interested. He is also apt to be a better expert than the Government employee, and he is apt to give the examination of seeds which he buys and sells greater care. He, too, has a reputation to maintain. He will not knowingly buy or sell fraudulent seeds. If he did his business would not last long. If the wholesaler and retailer are honest men the farmers are apt to get what they bargain for, and if they are both crooked and disposed to impose upon him then he has his redress. If he buys and pays for Kentucky blue-grass seed and the crop produced is Canadian blue grass then he has a cause of action against the retailer and also, I think, against the wholesaler, and can recover all the damage he has suffered. So, too, if a farmer bargain for pure seeds and he gets an adulterated article and pernicious weeds, of which the gentleman spoke, or other foul stuff comes up with the crop, he has a cause of action against the seedsmen for damage.

But I do not think there is much of this fraud practiced, and there are but very few mistakes made in this line of business. It would not pay. The imposition would be discovered too promptly. The fraud could not be concealed for long and the damage would be too great. There is every business reason and motive that the seedsman deal honestly with his customers.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] said

But the adulteration or misbranding of seed, while it is not in one way so extensive—and my information leads me to believe that not more than 10 to 20 per cent of the seed which is sold is adulterated—yet 10 to 20 per cent of the seeds sold, if adulterated, is a very large proportion.

That is an adroit statement. It may be inferred from it that from 10 to 20 per cent of the seeds sold are adulterated or misbranded, while the gentleman does not say so. He says that his information leads him to believe that not more than from 10 to 20 per cent are so adulterated or misbranded; but he did not say that his information leads him to believe, or that he does believe, that from 10 to 20 per cent are adulterated or misbranded. I do not believe it. I should want strong proof to convince me of that fact. Some farmers may want adulterated seeds—that is, they may desire a mixture of Canadian blue grass and Kentucky blue grass. If they want it they should have it. In my early days the grass commonly known as "quack" was a terror to some farmers. It has deep roots and wonderful vitality. When it once got a permanent hold on a field it was very difficult to kill it. It certainly was a nuisance and a pernicious enemy to the farmer and the farm. Yet there were farms on which clover or timothy would not grow or prosper, and the owners of such farms sometimes deliberately bought and sowed quack seed. Such a farmer may have been foolish, but I know of no reason why he should be stopped by law. A pure-seed law, or a seed-inspection law, is unnecessary, and an unnecessary law is a bad law.

Third. Such a law, not being necessary, would be an undue interference with the commercial and business affairs of our seedsmen and farmers, and undue paternalism in a matter which can be easily regulated by the laws of the several States.

The commerce clause of the Constitution would perhaps give Congress jurisdiction to legislate on this subject, as in the matter of pure foods. At all events, I would not venture an opinion on this question. It is being stretched yearly and is in danger of being overworked. It has its uses, but should not be invoked in ordinary business affairs which can otherwise be regulated. The farmers and seedsmen are protected by the common law of the several States, and if perchance they are not, each State may enact a statute for the protection of its own citizens.

The power of the central Government is rapidly increasing relatively to the power of the several States. Almost every new Federal law, and certainly every new appropriation, increases that relative power. Every appropriation for the improvement of rivers and harbors, every appropriation for the isthmian canal, every appropriation for the irrigation of arid lands, every appropriation for the purchase of forest reserves, every appropriation for a national quarantine law, every appropriation for the Army and Navy, every appropriation for rural freedelivery service, every appropriation for the meat-inspection and pure-food laws, and every new Federal law and every appropriation for the enforcement of such law tends to increase the power of the National Government relative to the power of the several State governments. Paternalism and centralization are growing too fast. Let us not help them along by the passage of an unnecessary pure-seed law.

Fourth. A pure-seeds law as outlined in the bill referred to would be expensive. It provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall make uniform rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of that law. That may mean a new bureau in the Department. At all events, it will mean a force of clerks, agents, and inspectors throughout the country to see to it that it is obeyed. The present bill carries an appropriation of $500,000 for the administration of the pure-food law, and the statement was made that if a large part of the work were not done by the officials of the several States and municipal divisions thereof and all the work had to be done by the United States officials it would cost several times that sum. This bill carries an appropriation of $3,000,000 for the enforcement of the meat-inspection law. Our Treasury is full this year and we do not mind it; but times may not always be so prosperous and the revenue may not always be so abundant, and the expense of executing these several laws may become a burden. We know by experience that the cost of every kind of public service continues to increase. Each bureau and division magnifies the importance of its own work. It wants to spread out with greater jurisdiction and more work and constantly de-mands larger appropriations. The expense of the administration of a pure-seed law will increase from year to year, as in the case of every other law and every other line of public service.

If we are to legislate under the commerce clause of the Constitution for the protection of our people against fraud and imposition, which can only result in monetary damage, then there are many other laws which might be made which are more important, because they are more necessary if the Government undertake to keep all business men honest. Why not enact a pure-clothing law to prevent the sale of shoddy for all wool? Why not enact a pure-silk law to prevent the sale of fabrics made partly of cotton for all silk? Why not have a pure-furniture law to prevent the sale of a bedstead made only a year ago for an antique? That fraud is very much more difficult of detection. Some of our people who have more money and vanity than good sense or good taste like to think that they sleep on a bed on which some fringe of royalty re-clined centuries ago. The new piece of furniture is made to look so much like the old that the imposition is easy and the proof of fraud difficult. It does not grow up or develop within a year, as does the fraud in the case of adulterated seeds. Why not make a law to protect such people from being cheated by foreign frauds and keep the money at home? Why not pass laws to protect every man, woman, and child in the purchase of the thousand and one articles which are bought in the market and which go into interstate and foreign com-We know there are dishonest men in this country, as merce? well as elsewhere, and that they are disposed to get the best of a bargain and cheat and misrepresent and get more than their commodity is reasonably worth. Why not pass a law to regulate all those lines of trade, and create bureaus, and appoint inspectors, agents, and clerks, to the end that all men may be kept honest? We might elaborate those laws and refine them and provide for their execution, so that every man may have a job as inspector, until our system would become so top-heavy that there would be no business to inspect.

In closing, I repeat that a law of this kind is not demanded by the people interested. It is not necessary. It would be an undue extension of Federal power. It would be expensive, and should not be enacted. The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF PUBLIC ROADS.

Salaries, Office of Public Roads: One Director, who shall be a scientist and have charge of all scientific and technical work, $2,750; one chief of records, $1,600; one editorial clerk, $1,200; two clerks, class 1, $2,400; three clerks, at $1,000 each, $3,000; two clerks, at $720 each, $1,440; in all, $12,390.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the words "seven hundred and fifty dollars," in line 20, page 64, the existing law being a salary of $2,500. This gives an increase to $2,750. I make the point of order against

Mr. WADSWORTH. The point of order is conceded, Mr. Chairman. That is another one of the promotions mentioned in the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move to amend by inserting "one Director, who shall be a scientist and shall have charge of all scientific and technical work, $2,500," and then amend the total.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to insert $500 in place of $750, which were stricken out, so as to make the salary $2,500.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Public roads: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make inquiries in regard to systems of road management throughout the United States; to furnish expert advice on road building; to make investigations in regard to the best methods of road making, and the best kinds of road-making materials in the several States; to investigate the chemical and physical character of road materials; for the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in the city of Washington-and elsewhere; for collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such investigations and experiments; for preparing, publishing, and distributing bulletins and reports; for rent and repairs of buildings not to exceed $2,000; for necessary office fixtures and supplies, apparatus, and materials; telegraph and telephone service, traveling and other necessary expenses, and to enable him to assist the agricultural colleges and experiment stations in disseminating information on this subject, $57,660.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "States," in line 8, page 65, the following: "to cooperate with the Post-Office Department in suggesting methods for maintenance and improvement of rural-route roads."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is simply to authorize the Office of Public Roads to cooperate with the Post-Office Department in making suggestions for the maintenance of rural-route roads. Many of the rural routes are being discontinued on account of the bad condition of the roads; and this cooperation will permit the Good Roads Office to offer suggestions that may prevent their further discontinu-

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me say to the gentleman that already the Post-Office Department are in consultation with this Bureau on this entire subject.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly; and the object of this amendment is simply to give specific authority and encouragement to this cooperation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I prefer that that should not be done in is bill. I raise the point of order that it is new legislation.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not confer on the Good Roads Office any additional authority; it does not attempt to extend its jurisdiction, it simply directs its attention more particularly to the roads used as rural routes.

Mr. FIELD. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a ques-

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

Mr. FIELD. Do I understand your amendment provides that this Bureau shall cooperate with the Post-Office Department in the maintenance of public roads?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; it only authorizes the Good Roads Office to make suggestions with respect to the improvement of roads that are rural routes.

Mr. FIELD. It does not contemplate their maintenance? Mr. SHEPPARD. No, sir; the object is only to suggest methods of maintenance and improvement.

Mr. FIELD. Why should they cooperate with the Post-Office Department?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Because it has special jurisdiction over rural routes and has a special interest in their preservation.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.
Mr. WALLACE. On the line suggested by the gentleman, I have already gotten information from the Post-Office Department that good roads were very necessary for the permanency of rural routes, and on this information I have been trying to impress on the people on routes in my district to look particularly after the conditions of their roads rather than an increase of carriers' pay. [Applause.]

Mr. SHEPPARD. The object of my amendment is to help the people preserve their routes. I will say to the gentleman that I am in favor of increasing the pay of the carriers. At present they are undoubtedly underpaid.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. OLMSTED). The Chair would ask the . gentleman from New York if there is any authority of law for the paragraph itself?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was just about to say to the Chairman that there was no organic law providing for that Bureau of Public Roads at all, and this whole paragraph is subject to the point of order; and if a point of order were made, it would be taken out of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the whole paragraph of the bill would be subject to the point of order if made; but not having been made, it is in order to perfect the paragraph with an amendment that is germane. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is it too late to make a point of order against the whole paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. After an amendment is offered it is too late

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would not do so, but I call attention to the absolutely confusing status of legislation upon an appropriation bill. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 83.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Shep-pard] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth] will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 52 noes 109.

Accordingly the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the totals be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the totals will be corrected later.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

And, hereafter, the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to make such appointments, promotions, and changes in salaries, to be paid out of the lump funds of the several bureaus, divisions, and offices of the Department as may be for the best interests of the service: Provided, That the maximum salary of any classified scientific investigator in the city of Washington, or other employee engaged in scientific work, shall not exceed $3,000 per annum. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to pay the salary of each employee from the roll of the bureau, independent division, or office in which the employee is working, and no other: Provided, however, That details may be made from or to the office of the Secretary when necessary and the services of the person whom it is proposed to detail are not required in that office; and he is further authorized and directed to submit to Congress each year a statement covering all appointments, promotions, or other changes made in the salaries paid from lump funds, giving in each case the title, salary, and amount of such change or changes, together with reasons therefor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the word "hereafter," in line 1, page 66.
Mr. WADSWORTH. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk read as follows:

EMERGENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Cotton-boll-weevil investigations: For the Bureau of Plant Industry: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the continued spread of the Mexican cotton boll weevil in the Southern States by encouraging the diversification of crops, improved cultural methods, breeding of new cottons, and to study the diseases of cotton, $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of which sum $40,000 shall be immediately available. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to expend said appropriation is such manner as he shall deem best, in cooperation with the State experiment stations and practical cotton growers. practical cotton growers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the words, in lines 4 and 5 of page 67, "of which sum $40,000 shall be immediately available."

Mr. BURLESON. I ask the gentleman from New York to reserve the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve the point of order against those words.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I make the request that the gentleman from New York reserve the point of order in the hope that I may prevail upon him to withdraw it. The insect pest, against which this item in the bill is directed, invaded the United States about fourteen years ago. It entered in the extreme southwestern part of Texas. It has traveled northward about 600 miles. It is now extending its operations eastward. It is gradually covering the cotton area. It can now be found in the lower tier of counties in the Indian Territory and in several counties in the southern part of Arkansas. For two years it has been in Louisiana, and can now be found in several parishes of that State. This year has been particularly favorable for the boll weevil, and experienced scientists fear that it will widely extend its operations next season. At this time this pest is hibernating on the banks of the Mississippi River. Department of Agriculture is ready to inaugurate a vigorous warfare against it next year. Careful thought has been given the situation and a plan has been made to resist its progress in all the counties adjoining or abutting the Mississippi River. Mr. Chairman, before the first appropriation was made to make warfare upon this pest it had cost the farmers of Texas who are engaged in raising cotton from $10,000,000 to $30,000,000 every year. After they had received the aid of the scientists of the Agricultural Department they knew what steps to take to circumvent it or to measurably protect themselves. I do not want others to suffer the loss Texas farmers suffered. is not particularly interested in the item against which the point of order is made, because it is intended to benefit those where the pest has only recently developed. The counties in Arkansas, in the Territory, and certain parishes in Louisiana are especially interested in it, because there they need to be shown how to fight it.

I will say to the gentleman from New York that the scientists of the Department of Agriculture think it is important and necessary that this provision should remain in the bill, and assurance has been given that it will save the people who are engaged in the production of cotton in the counties which are now being invaded by this pest, and where it will reach next year, millions of dollars. Mr. Chairman, if a few thousand dollars appropriated at this time and made immediately available will accomplish so much good, no technical point should be in-terposed to prevent it. This $40,000 will help to teach the farmers engaged in the production of cotton how to circumvent this damaging pest. It will enable them to produce from 25 to 40 per cent more cotton than they could without the lessons which can be easily taught by the scientists of the Department of Agriculture and which should be given to them at the most opportune time.

Mr. Chairman, for these reasons, I do sincerely hope the gentleman from New York will not insist upon the point of order. I insist upon this in the interest of those who are to be affected by this weevil next year, and not one person of those seriously menaced resides within the limits of my State. This pest will never be entirely destroyed, but the damage it can do can be largely minimized, but this can only be accomplished by such appropriations as the one to which the point of order is directed. I do not hesitate to say that the American people have benefited a thousand fold by the appropriations which have been made to enable the cotton producers to obtain a fair cotton yield in spite of this weevil. Years ago, when I asked for the first appropriation for this purpose, I spoke for and pleaded for my own people; now I ask that this appropriation be continued for the benefit of those who are just being affected by the ravages of this pest. A few dollars expended at the proper time will save the farmers in the region the weevil is now invading thousands and thousands of dollars. I sincerely hope the gentleman from New York will not press his point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, in addition to what the gentleman from Texas has said, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from New York to this state of affairs: Heretofore we have been spending in this work, through the Bureau of Plant Industry, $105,000 a year. This year we have transferred from the Bureau of Entomology an amount sufficient to make the total of the Bureau of Plant Industry $150,000, and in doing so we thought that the Bureau of Plant Industry offered a better solution of the boll-weevil problem than we were getting from the work of the Bureau of Entomology. Now, of course, the gentleman understands that the method of dealing with the boll weevil through the Bureau of Plant Industry is to take a farm and cooperate with some individual, and teach him how to raise this cotton in spite of the boll weevil; and they have accomplished some wonderful results along that line. The gentleman understands, also, that we begin to plant cotton in the South, or begin preparation for it, as early as the 1st of March. We have increased this appropriation for this purpose very largely, because we want to broaden the scope of the work being done by this Bureau. Hence we have made this $40,000 immediately available in order that the Department may go to work and lay its plans and get its demonstration farms in working order, and in time for the crop for this year. If the gentleman insists upon his point of order, the fund which is intended to initiate additional demonstration and diversified farms—and this seems the only solution of the weevil problem—can not become available in time to be of much service during the present year. We must begin this work, and these funds must be immediately available. Otherwise this work can not begin before the 1st of July, when it is too late to do so. I trust that the gentleman from New York will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I concur in what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Lever] have said in making the appeal to the gentleman from New York, and I desire to call attention to the fact that this appropriation has the indorsement of the Secretary of Agriculture. I hold in my hand a letter written by Secretary Wilson in reference to this very matter. The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, Washington, December 18, 1996.

Hon. Gordon Russell, House of Representatives.

My Dear Sir: I have your favor of December 13, transmitting copy of a bill which you have recently introduced, having for its object the appropriation of $50,000, to be expended in an extension of the demonstration work now being carried on in the Southern States where the boll weevil is already at work and where it is likely soon to make its stration work now being carried on in the Southern States where the boll weevil is already at work and where it is likely soon to make its appearance.

The Department has been spending annually about $40,000 of the $105,000 appropriated for meeting the ravages of the boll weevil in this farm demonstration work. The work has been conducted under the direction of the Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry and is in direct charge of Dr. S. A. Knapp, with headquarters at Lake Charles, La. From all the evidence I have at hand, it would seem that this work has resulted in much practical good in arousing the farmers to the necessity of better cultural methods, the introduction of early maturing crops, and better farm practices generally. I understand that, directly and indirectly, in the neighborhood of 100,000 farmers have been reached by this work during the past season.

Necessarily this work has been confined to regions invaded by the boll weevil and to those just in advance of the pest. The expenditures so far made have been almost entirely for the pay of experienced men who visit the farmers in the regions indicated and point out a way for improved methods of crop growing. With the $40,000 available a certain extent of territory has been covered each year, and with the additional $50,000 of course just so much more territory could be reached.

While the item is one not included in my estimates, I think the work, if authorized, would result in benefit to the entire region.

Very truly, yours,

JAMES WILSON, Secretary.

JAMES WILSON, Secretary.

Now, I have also a letter from Doctor Knapp on that subject which I will ask permission to insert in the Record, and he gives it as his opinion that the $50,000 which I have sought to be made available in the bill which I introduced for this purpose, if it can be had now, would be worth $5,000,000 for the next year to the cotton planters. Doctor Knapp further shows that the money he then had on hand only enabled him to have one man in sixteen counties for this demonstration farm work, and therefore he could only reach a very small percentage of the farmers. He says that if he can get this fund it will enable him to give the demonstration farm work in every neighborhood of the South now being ravaged by the boll weevil. So, Mr. Chairman, I join in the appeal made by the gentleman from South Carolina and the gentleman from Texas in asking the gentleman from New York not to press the point of order, in view of the fact that the farmers of the South are facing such an impending calamity because of the boll weevil. Experience shows that the only opportunity they have to make a cotton crop is to pursue such methods as will enable them to make the crop before the middle of July. After that time the cotton crop is gathered by the boll weevil and not by the farmer. Now, I am not familiar with the rule that the gentleman invokes; but it strikes me that it is not the proper time to make such application of the rules as will prevent the appropriation of $40,000 which is provided for in this bill being made immediately avail-

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, my friends seem to be unnecessarily alarmed. I have no doubt that the work is very important and very necessary, and if it were not possible to obtain in a proper manner the funds required I should be in-clined not to invoke the rule. At the last session of Congress the Revised Statutes were so amended as to prevent the making of deficiencies by Departments. Contingent appropriations were required to be apportioned so that in no part of the year should there be a greater sum expended than in any other part. apportionment is not to be followed the head of the Department is required to waive the apportionment in writing and certify to Congress his reasons for waiving the apportionment.

This agricultural appropriation bill will not become a law until very near the 4th of March. This $40,000 is a deficiency appropriation for the present year. It should be carried in the general deficiency appropriation act. The general deficiency bill will be a law almost as quickly, if not as quickly, as this particular law. A deficiency appropriation for this purpose should be carried in that bill, and the Secretary of Agriculture should be carried in that bill, and the secretary of Agriculture should be compelled to certify to Congress in writing, as provided by the statutes, his reasons for waiving the apportionment, if he has waived it. It may be that he has not waived it; that he has disregarded the law, as that Department has done on other occasions, and expended the appropriation without any attention whatever to the limitation placed upon his power by Congress. Since this appropriation can be made in ample time, as quickly as if carried in this bill, and under proper supervision and investigation, I believe the point of order should be insisted on.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I wish to appeal to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] on this mat-I believe if he will look at it properly he will not make the point of order. I live in the northern part of Texas. my section and in the section across the river in the Indian Territory—the Red River Valley—which is a great cotton country, there has never been any boll weevil until last year. That was after this appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1907 had passed. Our necessities have arisen since that bill was passed. We need this appropriation, which is in the nature of an urgent deficiency, as the gentleman says; and now I submit to the gentleman that a matter which affects our people to the amount of millions of dollars—a thing to which in itself he is not opposed—should not be jeopardized in this manner by his point of order. Why should it be put over? Why should we be compelled to take our chances on an appropriation to be engrafted on another bill? We need this money now. The cause is just I hope he will not make the point of order. and urgent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if I did not make this point of order this money would not be available at this time. It will not be available until this bill is enacted into law and it will not be a law until approximately the 4th of March. It should be carried in the proper bill for many reasons.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman insists on his point of order. I concede it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against a portion of the paragraph commencing with the word and," the last word in line 5, page 67, and including the balance of the paragraph. I will reserve the point of order if anyone desires to discuss it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What point of order does the gentleman make against it?

Mr. NORRIS. That it is new legislation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That was contained in the bill last year and it is simply directory of an appropriation made by this act. That is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. NORRIS. It simply directs the Secretary of Agriculture as to how he shall expend the money. It is in conflict with the general law on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair that the point of order comes too late.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that there has been no discussion on this paragraph excepting what took place on another point of order, and of covrse the Chair could not entertain two points of order at once. I made my point as soon as the other one was decided.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserved

his point of order.

The reserving of a point or order, Mr. Chair-Mr. NORRIS. man, to one portion of a paragraph, and discussion upon that, would certainly not preclude the making or the reservation of a point of order against another part of the paragraph; otherwise by making a fictitious point one might very easily prevent the making of genuine and valid points of order against a paragraph or a portion of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that where a point of order is reserved and the merits of the question involved are discussed in addition to the point of order, that constitutes discussion of the paragraph. In this instance the point of order was not discussed at all. The merits of the proposition involved in the portion to which the point of order was raised was discussed.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the Chair holds that that kind of a discussion upon the reservation of a point of order would prevent the making of another point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so holds. The Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Bureau of Entomology: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the continued spread of the Mexican cotton boll weevil in the Southern States by further studies of the habits and damage of the pest, the collection of data regarding its status, the study of parasites and diseases, the testing of remedies suggested, and the completion of experiments now under way, $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to expend said appropriation in such manner as he shall deem best, in cooperation with the State experiment stations and practical cotton growers.

Mr. NORPIS, Mr. Chairman, I. make, the point of order

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the part of the paragraph commencing in line 18 with the word "and," including the balance of the paragraph.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On what ground?
Mr. NORRIS. On the ground that it is new legislation. will reserve it, Mr. Chairman, if some one wants to be heard on the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Prevention of spread of moths: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the continued spread of the gypsy and brown-tail moths, $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated and made immediately available. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to expend said appropriation by establishing a quarantine against such further spread in such manner as he shall deem best, in cooperation with the authorities of the different States concerned and with the State experiment stations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the language on page 68 in lines 1 and 2, "to be made immediately available."

Mr. ROBERTS. Will the gentleman reserve his point of

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, after the appeal that was made by the colleagues of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] on the provision concerning the boll weevil I have little hope that I can persuade the gentleman to withdraw the point of order he indicates in this instance, but I want to point out to the gentleman this, and let the responsibility be upon him. If he desires to get the best results from the expenditure of Government money, I will say to him that every dollar expended now in the gypsy-moth work and to be expended between now and the 1st day of June will produce better results, will go farther toward eradicating this pest than $5 expended after the 1st of June, by reason of the life habits of the pest. The small appropriation that was made last year has made it neces-sary to ask that this amount be made immediately available if we are to produce the best results in this work, and I take it that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], with all other members of the committee, is only anzious to see the best results produced from the appropriation of public funds.

Mr. McCALL. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order? Did the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Several Members. Yes.

Mr. McCALL. I trust the gentleman will not make the point of order, because I happen to have some practical experience with the gypsy moth and can testify something as to the habits of that pest. I have an interest in a small tract of land, perhaps of 30 or 40 acres, covered with trees. Last year we spent upon it something like $3,000, and we will have to go over the work almost entirely this year. It is very necessary to expend this money, and I am inviting the attention of the gentleman from New York especially-

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am unable to hear the gentleman from Massachusetts, on account of the confusion.

Mr. McCALL. And I will say it is very necessary for the proper expenditure of this money most effectively to have it spent between now and the 1st of July.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield for a question?

Mr. McCALL. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Massachusetts knows this money is not available when this bill passes this House.

Mr. McCALL. I understand that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And it will not be available until this bill is enacted into law.

Mr. McCALL. And I understand that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the gentleman has been in this House long enough to know that appropriation bills do not become law in the short session until within a few days of adjournment.

Mr. McCALL. It will be about the 4th of March.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; and if this is carried in the proper bill, the general deficiency act, it will be available just as quickly as if it were carried in this bill, which is an improper place under the rule.

Mr. McCALL. Well, I would say that the appropriation is properly in this bill. Now it seems to me it is standing on rather a small point as between jurisdictions of committees to object in case of a clear emergency to inserting the words "immediately available" in this act. There is no question but that whatever of this money is spent between the 4th of March and the 1st of July will do five times the good it would do if not spent until after the 1st of July.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have a good deal of confidence in the gentleman from Massachusetts. Is this a particularly urgent matter?

Mr. McCALL. In my opinion it is.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman explain why the Secretary of Agriculture did not ask to have it appropriated in the urgent deficiency bill passed last week?

Mr. McCALL. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, what was in the mind of the Secretary of Agriculture, but I was giving some of my experience to the gentleman, which he did not hear. I gave my experience with these gypsy moths. They are absolutely destructive of the trees, and the work must be done soon or it will not do much good to do it during the current year. trust the gentleman will not insist upon the point of order.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentle-man from New York this does not come in the nature of a deficiency appropriation at all. We have a small appropriation under which the Department is working that has been prorated over the fiscal year, and whether or not this takes effect immediately the authorities are still working and have money to work until the 1st day of July. It is only a question of making the $150,000 we are now appropriating of the utmost possible service, and to do that a large part of the money should be expended at the time of year when the leaves are not on the trees, when the egg clusters of this pest can be readily seen and destroyed. I want to say to the gentleman that it is much destroyed. I want to say to the gentland the say to the say the say that the say to the say th March, as suggested by the gentleman, we will then have several months to work before these egg clusters hatch out, and that is the period when the most efficient work can be done against these pests. With this explanation I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Chairman, I suppose that next to Napoleon the boll weevil is the most illustrious tactician the world has ever known. [Applause.] Now, I shall go no further with him, but I want to state briefly the facts that confront the people of my district and of the district of my friend from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and districts in Texas. We all join in that. This fact confronts us: The boll weevil has entered the Seventh district of Arkansas. [Applause.] It has entered several counties of that district, and my information is that they came from the next district adjoining, which is the district of my friend Mr. RANSDELL. And my information further is that some came from the southeast corner of Texas. Now, the object is that by cultural and scientific investigation in the very earliest possible time you can meet this tactician and you can accomplish the most effective work. My district runs parallel with the districts of my friends from Louisiana, Mr. Warkins and Mr. RANSDELL, from the Red River, which at this point is approximate to Texas and to the Mississippi River on the east. That is the gateway to the cotton belt of the State of Arkansas. plause.] Now, sir, we are in a condition where we need this money at the very earliest possible time. In view of those cultural conditions and those ideas of agriculture that the Department has sent into our district, establishing demonstration farms and asking for this money for cooperation with the practical farmers there, I do not think, gentlemen, that it ought to be delayed one moment.

The gentleman here says that some of the committee can do . We do not know it, sir. This committee is ready to do it; this House, I believe, is ready to do it, and I do not believe in putting off for another day what you can get to-day. [Applause.]
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr.
FITZGERALD] insist on his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I concede the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Eradicating cattle ticks: For Bureau of Animal Industry: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to undertake experimental work in cooperation with State authorities in eradicating the ticks transmitting southern cattle fever, $150,000; of which sum $25,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the language in lines 11 and 12.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

And hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to furnish, upon application, prints and lantern slides from negatives in the possession of the Department and to charge for the same a price to cover the cost of preparation, such price to be determined and established by the Secretary of Agriculture, and the money received from such sales to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against that paragraph.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I concede it. The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be empowered to correct all totals.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return for a moment to page 14, the meat-inspection portion of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth] asks unanimous consent to return to page 14. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, last June, when the meat-inspection legislation was under consideration by Congress, the Chief Executive of the nation saw fit, in a letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives, in unmeasured terms, and in language conveying a threat, and in words intimating a doubt as to the sincerity and honesty of purpose of the members of that committee, to condemn the meat-inspection bill reported by the Committee on Agriculture for the consideration of the House.

I send to the desk the Executive's letter, and ask that the Clerk read it as part of my remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE, Washington, D. C., June 14, 1906.

Washington, D. C., June 14, 1996.

My Dear Mr. Waddenstell: I have gone over your bill very carefully, and not only obtained a report from Mr. McCabe, as I told you I would, but also obtained a report from Mr. Reynolds on it. I am sorry to say the more closely I investigate your proposed substitute the worse I find it. Almost every change is one for the worse; so that it hardly seems necessary for me to enumerate them. Perhaps the amendment as you have now drafted it is not quite as bad as it was when you submitted it to me in the first instance; but it is very, very bad. There seems to be one point in which it is possible that the amendment is even worse than the original amendment, if, as seems likely, there is no provision for making plants accessible at all hours to the inspectors. In any event, I am sorry to have to say that this strikes me as an amendment which, no matter how unintentionally, is framed so as to minimize the chance of rooting out the evil in the packing business. Doubtless it suits the packers, who object to a thoroughgoing inspection, much better than the Senate amendment, and I have no doubt that not only the packers, but their allies in business and those stock growers who are influenced by them, would prefer it. But I am convinced it would in the long run be a heavy blow to the honest stock raiser and the honest packer to adopt these provisions rather than the far better ones contained in the Senate amendment; for, as compared with the Senate amendment, this proposed amendment, which you tell me is that of the majority of the House committee, would hamper in the most grossly improper fashion the Secretary of Agriculture in doing the work which you have appointed him to do, and will prevent even so much of this work as can be done at all from being well and thoroughly done. If the bill should go through in the form that the majority of your committee proposes, it might be that I should sign it as working a certain slight improvement over the present law; but if so, I should accompany it

Mr. WADSWORTH. In justice to the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives I wrote the following answer to that letter, which I send to the desk and ask the Clerk to read as a part of my remarks. The Clerk read as follows:

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., June 15, 1906.

Washington, D. C., June 15, 1906.

My Dear Mr. President: I received your letter last night. You are wrong, "very, very wrong," in your estimate of the committee's bill. It is as perfect a piece of legislation to carry into effect your own views on this question as was ever prepared by a committee of Congress. Every member of the committee is absolutely as honest and sincere as yourself in his desire to secure the passage of a rigid meat-inspection bill. They know the meaning of the English language.

To show you how unreliable the information is upon which you base your opinion of the bill, I call your attention to the following language in your letter:

"There is no provision for making the plants accessible at all hours to the inspectors."

to the inspectors

If you will turn to page 4 of the bill (copy inclosed), line 2, you will find the following words:
"And for the purposes of such examination and inspection said inspectors shall have access at all times to every part of said establishment."

Can the English language be made any plainer?

Turn also to page 6, line 16, and you will find this language:

"The Secretary of Agriculture shall cause an examination and inspection of all cattle, sheep, swine, and goats, and the food products thereof, slaughtered and prepared in the establishments hereinbefore described for the purposes of interstate or foreign commerce, to be made during the nighttime, as well as during the daytime, when the slaughtering of said cattle, sheep, swine, and goats, or the preparation of said food products, is conducted during the nighttime."

Therefore in at least one of the two criticisms you make of the bill you must admit that you are absolutely wrong.

You say:

You say: "Doubtless it suits the packers, who object to a thoroughgoing in

"Doubliess it suits the packers, who object to a thoroughgoing inspection."

I told you on Wednesday night, when I submitted the bill to you, that the packers insisted before our committee on having a rigid inspection law passed. Their life depends upon it, and the committee will bear me out in the statement that they placed no obstacle whatever in our way, but, on the contrary, gave us many valuable suggestions, based upon their practical knowledge of their business.

Your other actual criticism of the amendment refers to the "court-review" clause. The worst that can be said of this clause is that it is perhaps unnecessary—that it is already covered by existing law. I have always been taught to honor the judiciary of my country. I have always been taught to honor the rights of its citizens and to respect the rights of property, and I can not believe that the mere repetition of a provision which guarantees to the citizen the privilege of an appeal to the courts of the land when he believes his property rights are threatened can be justly or properly objected to.

The rest of your letter deals with generalities and a general condemnation of the committee's bill. If you or your advisers will point out specifically wherein it actually fails to accomplish your purpose, I can assure you it will be promptly remedied.

You say further along in your letter:

"And I can not even promise to sign it, because the provisions are so bad that, in my opinion, if they had been deliberately designed to prevent the remedying of the evils complained of, they could not have been worse."

I regret that you, the President of the United States, should feel been worse."

I regret that you, the President of the United States, should feel justified, by innuendo at least, in impugning the sincerity and the competency of a committee of the House of Representatives. You have no warrant for it.

Very truly, yours,

J. W. Wadsworth.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT,
President of the United States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As the House well knows, the very bill condemned so severely by the Executive in his letter to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, with few amendments in its verbiage, amendments which in no way—and I measure my words—increased its effectiveness, was signed by him on June 30, 1906, and is now the law of the land. In further justice to, and in vindication of, the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives, and in view of all the circumstances and the use that has been made of the Executive's letter, I may be permitted to say, in justice to and in vindication of myself, I offer the testimony of the Secretary of Agriculture, as given by Doctor Melvin, of the Bureau of Animal Industry, the Bureau having in charge the execution of that law. I read from the hearings of that committee on January 9, pages 228 and 243, the testimony of Doctor Melvin.

I now read from page 228 of the hearings:

Doctor Melvin. The general action of the bill has been found to be very effective, and there is no doubt that it has resulted in a great deal of good, and I would not like to endanger it by suggesting

And now from page 243:

Mr. Lever. If you will pardon me a moment, Mr. Chairman, I want to get this clear. We will take Doctor Melvin back a little bit. We had a severe agitation last year about this meat business—the packing business. I want to ask the doctor whether or not, in his opinion, that agitation hurt seriously our export trade in meat and meat products?

Doctor Melvin There is no doubt but what it did for a time

Doctor MELVIN. There is no doubt but what it did for a time Mr. Lever. For a time. Now, I want to ask you this—if this bill prepared by this committee has had any effect whatever in restoring the confidence of our foreign buyers of meat and meat products, and are we beginning to get back on a normal basis in the export of these products?

oducts?
Doctor Melvin. Yes; I-think we are, quite rapidly.
Mr. Lever. Is it your opinion that it is the result of this bill?
Doctor Melvin. Yes.
Mr. Lever. Prepared by this committee?
Doctor Melvin. Yes.

So that after seven months of study of its provisions, during which time many questions arose and had to be settled and many rules and regulations promulgated, and after four months of active enforcement of the bill, the Secretary of Agriculture has not found it necessary to suggest or recommend a single amendment to make it more effective—not one. So far, at least, the bill has been found to be an honest one and an effective one, just as I promised you gentlemen last June on behalf of the Committee on Agriculture, when, without reading it, you passed it under suspension of the rules, it would be. That is all. [Loud and long-continued general applause.]

I now move that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Foster of Vermont, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 24815, and had directed him to report the same with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the vote will be taken on the amendments in gross.

A separate vote was not demanded.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to in gross

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Wadsworth, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

IMPOSING TAX ON BAY RUM BROUGHT FROM PORTO RICO.

Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported the bill (H. R. 25122) to impose a tax on bay rum brought from Porto Rico into the United States; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. How many amendments are there?
Mr. COUSINS. I think five.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of the following conferees: Mr. Cousins, Mr. Charles B. Landis, and Mr. How-

SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up House resolution 739, reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. It is a privileged resolution, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

House resolution 739.

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General is directed to report to the House, as early as may be practicable, a statement of the number of pounds and cash receipts from matter of the second class annually from July 1, 1877, to June 30, 1906; also the total cash receipts annually from all other sources for the same period, in such form as to show for each fiscal year the relative per cent of increase or decrease of receipts from matter of the second class to the per cent of increase or decrease or decrease of receipts from all post-office sources.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the passage of the reso-

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT CLINTON, IOWA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 7760) to authorize the Albany Railroad Bridge Company or the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company to reconstruct a bridge across the Mississippi River, a similar House bill being on the Calendar.

The bill was read, as follows:

An act (S. 7760) to authorize the Albany Railroad Bridge Company or the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company to reconstruct a bridge across the Mississippi River.

Whereas the Albany Railroad Bridge Company, a corporation, owns, and the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company, a corporation, has leased and is using, a railroad bridge across the Mississippi River between the city of Clinton, Iowa, and an opposite point on the main bank in the State of Illinois, and by reason of the age of said bridge and its inadequacy to present conditions and needs it is proposed to en-large such bridge or replace it with a larger and more serviceable struc-ture: Therefore ture: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That said Albany Railroad Bridge Company, or with its consent said Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company, its successors and assigns, are hereby authorized to enlarge said existing bridge across the Mississippi River, with its approaches, or to replace said bridge and its approaches with a new bridge and approaches in the same location as the existing bridge or south of such location and not more than 100 feet therefrom, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906; and said enlarged or reconstructed bridge may be maintained and operated as a railroad bridge.

Sec. 2. That this Act shall be null and void unless the work of enlarging or replacing said bridge is begun within two years and is completed within five years from the date of the passage of this Act.

Sec. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this Act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. LOWDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend this bill. In section 3, on page 2, line 22, strike out the words "two years" and insert "one year," and strike out "five" and insert "three," which is in accordance with the terms of the bill as reported by the House committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 22, strike out the words "two years" and insert "one year," and in the same line strike out "five" and insert "three;" so that it will read: "said bridge is begun within one year and completed within three years from the date of the passage of this act."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Lowden, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The similar House bill will lie on the table.

REPRINT OF REPORT ON LIQUOR BILL.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a reprint of House Report No. 6708, including part 2, the views of the minority, from the Committee on the Judiciary, in regard to the bill to regulate interstate commerce in certain cases, which is known as the "liquor bill."

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. McLachlan indefinitely, on account of serious illness in family. RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 24991—the river and harbor bill. Pending that motion, I would ask unanimous consent that any Member may have leave to print remarks germane to the river and harbor bill for five days after the bill is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gen-

[After a pause.] The Chair hears none. tleman?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I would also ask that an arrangement be made as to the disposition of time. So far as the committee is concerned, it has been agreed between the senior Democratic member, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bank-Head], and myself that the control of the time shall rest with

Mr. KEIFER. All the time?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. For general debate, of course.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what length of time and what opportunity we are to have for general debate.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Well, of course, I can not forecast that. I am not asking for a limitation of time.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman whether the senior member of the committee with whom he has agreed is opposed to the bill?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. No; he is not.

Mr. DALZELL. It is not the custom of the House to put the control of the time for debate entirely in the hands of the party in favor of the bill.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that so far no assignments of time have been made. The requests that have been made are almost entirely by those who desire to advocate specific projects, who are indirectly opposed to the bill, opposed to it because the items which they favor are not in it; and it will be my desire to give such time as can be given to all who desire to be heard.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Would it not be desirable to make an arrangement as to the time at once, so that the Members who expect to speak may be informed as to when they can take the floor?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I do not think that is practicable. Mr. BARTHOLDT. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that we have certain objections to some features of this bill. Consequently, as far as part of the bill is concerned, we are opponents of the bill, and possibly a certain amount of time in opposition should be controlled by us. According to an arrangement entered into between the distinguished chairman of the committee and myself and some other gentleman, we were to receive, for the speeches to be delivered on our side, six hours, and I wish that arrangement could be sanctioned by the House at this time, so that we may know what we can expect.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I will say that if I have control of the time I shall make every effort to give to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] and those who, with him, favor two projects six hours. The gentleman from Missouri, however, will realize that that is a very generous apportionment of time, and I would suggest to him and to the House that if those who favor all these projects, which are not in the bill, will get together and agree among themselves and take half the time, it will be extremely gratifying to the committee as well as to its chairman.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman from Ohio that I shall probably not want any time myself, and I have no doubt at all that he will be entirely just and generous in the disposition of the time; but what I object to is the establishment of a precedent, unheard of in this House up to this time, of turning over the control of all of the time on both sides to one gentleman. The custom, of course, under such circumstances, is to have the time controlled by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and its seems to me that it would be very unwise for the House to depart from that custom. I repeat what I said; I have no doubt the gentleman from Ohio would be entirely just in his treatment of those who are opposed to the bill, and that I do not know that I should want any time myself.

If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will vield-

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Of course the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, under the rules, can only recognize a man for an hourno less time and no greater time—and for that reason it is often desirable to have some one in control of the time who can give less than an hour, so that there may be orderly procedure.

Mr. DALZELL. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole can recognize for a less time, and the occasions are very few when the Committee of the Whole does not allow additional time on request.

Mr. MANN. He can make an agreement to recognize for less time, but under the rules anybody who obtains the floor from the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole is entitled to one the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole is entitled to one hour's time in general debate, and the Chairman can not limit it. He may refuse to recognize a Member unless he says he will take less time, of course.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman from Illinois will not dispute my proposition that there is no precedent-

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. If the gentleman will kindly yield, that was the method pursued two years ago on this same bill. The time was entirely under the control of the Chairman. That was the method employed, also, in the bill of 1899.

Mr. MANN. I want to say to the gentleman from Ohio that he can reach the same purpose by asking that the time be controlled by himself and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANK-HEAD]. The gentleman from Alabama can then place his time in the control of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. DALZELL. I do not think so. I do not think two parties can be recognized to control the time, both of whom favor the That is not the custom in this House and never has been. If there is a precedent, such as the gentleman from Ohio has just mentioned, it is a bad precedent, and one that ought not to be followed.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I should like to ask my colleague if he intends to proceed with the discussion of the bill to-night?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I think not.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then would it not be wise to go into Committee of the Whole and take up the bill, and then adjourn until merning, with a view of accommodating all these different interests and coming to an agreement before we meet to-morrow?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I would suggest that I have no objection to that, except that we desire to make all possible progress.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will not that be in the interest of prog-

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The request that the time be controlled by the chairman of the committee is not upon my initiative, but in view of the peculiar situation. A number of Members of the House desire to be heard on behalf of specific projects. It did not seem to be desirable to divide or apportion the time between two persons for that reason, and it was the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead] that all control be given to the chairman. The effort has been made to accommodate, as far as possible, those who desire to be

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I would have no objection at all to the proposed arrangement except as a precedent of what might follow very much to the damage of the minority party upon the floor, whichever it might be. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] is mistaken in one thing. He said a moment ago that the time had never been put in the control of two persons each of whom was in favor of the bill. That has very frequently occurred. Agricultural committees and other committees have come in when time was controlled by the chairman of the committee and the senior minority member, both of whom were in favor of the bill reported to the House. There is a precedent for that.

Now, it seems to me that the object sought by the gentleman from Ohio can be equally as well attained if the time is controlled by him and the senior Democratic member on the Rivers and Harbors Committee. If we set the precedent asked for, it might be invoked in case of a political committee later on or a matter in which politics was involved, and in that way the minority might be cut out entirely from the deliberations of this body. It is the precedent I object to, and not this request. I suggest that the gentleman from Ohio modify the request so that the time be controlled jointly by him and by the senior Democrat on the committee.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I will state that if that is done arrangements made with the Representatives who advocate the deep waterways must be modified or withdrawn. I am entirely willing and should prefer an arrangement that one-half of the time be controlled by the gentleman from Alabama if he will kindly share with me the responsibility of meeting the demands.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I think it is fair for me to say that the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors requested me in the outset to divide this responsibility with him. I declined to do it, or rather I insisted that he should take it, as I thought it would be best that the chairman should take control of it after making satisfactory arrangements with the different gentlemen who seek to discuss this question. I have no desire in the world to control and parcel out the time on this bill, for I am in favor of every line in it. But if it is thought best. I am willing to take my share of the responsibility, although I should greatly prefer that the chairman should do it.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to make the request for control by myself if there is any opposition; and I modify my request so that the time may be equally divided between the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead] and myself. I desire to say to the gentlemen to whom I spoke about allotments of time that it will be necessary to modify any promises that I have made.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether, in view of the division of time between the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee and the minority member, the ranking member of the minority, he intends to abrogate the agreement that was entered into between myself and a number of gentlemen who are in favor of projects not reported in the bill and possibly some projects which are reported in the bill?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that I should still be willing to apportion three hours to the gentlemen from Illinois and Missouri and others who have spoken to me.

Mr. MADDEN. Can we ask the gentleman from Alabama whether he will give us three hours more of his time?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is a question, Mr. Speaker, I have not been consulted about heretofore.

Mr. MADDEN. I assume, Mr. Speaker, that he would have been consulted about it if he had not yielded his right to consultation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman was not yielding up his right. I can object and make one objection of it, but I am simply objecting from a party standpoint. I do not want a precedent started that a Republican chairman shall control all the time.

Mr. MADDEN. We have no objection as to who controls the time if we can get such time as we desire.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a suggestion to the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Com-He seems to be confining the discussion on this bill to the bill itself and to the two projects, one popularly known as the Chicago Drainage Canal and the other as the 14-foot channel from St. Louis to the Gulf. I want to suggest that there are other projects that other people are interested in. For instance, I am interested in one for a 14-foot channel from St. Louis to the Gulf and one from St. Louis to the Falls of St. Anthony, and also one from Alton to Fort Benton. The gentle-man from Pennsylvania is interested in the Pennsylvania project, and we all want to get some sort of a hearing. I do not have much doubt about getting the time that I want myself, because I know I shall get it.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I think I may say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Clark] that all possible effort will be made to give the time. I trust the remarks to be made will not be quite proportionate to the length of the channels that he desires to have improved. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mine may not be, but by the time they all get a hearing I fancy the remarks will be somewhat elongated.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that if there be a precedent for what is proposed here—that is, that the chairman of the committee shall control all of the time or the chairman of the committee and somebody else who agrees with him shall control all of the time for debate—it is a precedent that ought never to have arisen under any circumstances, and I doubt whether it ever arose knowingly in the House.

Mr. MANN. How about an ordinary appropriation bill?

Mr. KEIFER. It may be that in the apportionment of time when there is an appropriation bill and where it is the purpose to have general debate that sweeps over all the questions of the world and shall not be confined to the bill, some such thing may have happened. But I now rise to say that if there is anything to be inferred by this talk about certain syndicates having six hours' time I want to put in a protest, for I am not in that syndicate, and I want to say that I want to organize one of my own before we get through with this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, if the House declines to grant unanimous consent to agree to any division of the time and the House goes into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill, is it not a fact that the time will then be controlled by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House, as the Chair understands it, when the House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the Chairman of that committee recognizes gentlemen to speak to the bill, preferring the committee and alternating between those who are in favor of the bill and those who are against the bill. If no one rises against the bill, then it is the practice of the Chairman to recognize the membership of the House outside of the committee, and the Chair will say that under a fair construction of this rule the time has been heretofore divided as nearly as could be equally between those who favor the bill and those who oppose it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then all that is necessary to be done is to object to any agreement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, to w

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, to what request?
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton] has modified his request and asks that the time for general debate be controlled, one-half by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], as the Chair understands the gentleman.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to that request?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, unless I can secure a modification of this request to the extent that six hours shall be given to gentlemen representing the deep waterway on the Mississippi and Missouri river improvement questions I shall be bound to object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

H. R. 24821. An act to authorize the Georgia Southwestern and Gulf Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Chattahoochee River between the States of Alabama and Georgia;

H. R. 24815. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. M. C. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On January 29:

S. 5469. An act to authorize the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to investigate and report upon the industrial, social, moral, educational, and physical condition of woman and child workers in the United States; and

S. 5560. An act for the relief of Matthew J. Davis.

On January 30:

S. 1894. An act for the relief of P. S. Corbett; and

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLARD. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10595) for the relief of Nye & Schneider

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay the sum of $61.13 to Nye & Schneider Company, of Fremont, Nebr., being an unpaid balance on bill rendered for fuel furnished the United States Government by that company during the years 1893 and 1894 for the purpose of heating the post-office building at Hastings, Nebr.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLATT. I ask unanimous consent for the considera-tion of the bill (S. 7163) to correct the naval record of Alfred Burgess

I myself have some bills which I should like to have passed; but the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] has given notice that he wants to speak at the end of the routine morning business. He is limited in time, because he has got to get through before 2 o'clock; and while he may not take that time, I feel compelled to object to the consideration of any bill until he gets through.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from New York.

EXECUTIVE FUNCTIONS AND RESERVED STATE RIGHTS.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I call up resolution No. 199, which was submitted by me on the 17th of last month, and ask to have read as a substitute for the original resolution the resolution which I now send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT The substitute resolution submitted by the Senator from Maryland will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate the functions of the Executive should be limited to the performance of the duties assigned to him by the Constitution and by the laws passed in pursuance thereof, and there should be no interference by the Executive with the legislative or judicial departments of the Government, and the legislative, judicial, and executive departments of the Government should be forever kept separate and distinct: And resolved further, That if additional constitutional powers are necessary to carry on the purposes of the General Government, they must be procured by amendments to the Constitution and not by a strained construction of the delegated powers so as to invade the reserved rights of the States.

Mr. RANNER. Mr. President some weeks are necessary.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, some weeks ago a member of the Cabinet, a lawyer of great attainments and profound learning, in an address delivered by him, and that has been given wide circulation in the public press, gave utterance to the following sentiment:

It is useless for the advocates of States' rights to inveigh against the supremacy of the constitutional laws of the United States or against the extension of national authority in the fields of necessary control where the States themselves fall in the performance of their duty. The instinct for self-government among the people of the United States is too strong to permit them long to respect anyone's right to exercise a power which he fails to exercise. The governmental control which they deem just and necessary they will have. It may be that such control would better be exercised in particular instances by the governments of the States, but the people will have the control they need, either from the States or from the National Government, and if the States fail to furnish it in due measure, sooner or later constructions of the Constitution will be found to vest the power where it will be exercised in the National Government.

About a week after this address had been delivered and suffi-

About a week after this address had been delivered and sufficient time for further reflection had elapsed, the distinguished Secretary of State, in answer to comments and criticisms that had been passed upon his remarks, publicly announced that he had no intention of changing a word or an idea that he had expressed upon this occasion.

A DANGEROUS DOCTRINE OF CONSTITUTIONAL CONSTRUCTION.

Speaking now with the utmost deference and respect, and with great admiration for the services that he has rendered in the various public positions which he has occupied and that he has so highly honored, I regard this doctrine thus announced. adhered to, and emphasized as a most dangerous and insidious attack upon the institutions of the country. I would not attach so much practical importance to the address if it were not for the fact that the propositions advanced are being constantly illustrated in the administration of our Government, and therefore they can not be regarded simply as the expression of a sentiment or a theory, but must be taken as they were intended to be taken, as manifesting the purpose of the present Administra-tion to carry this new doctrine of constitutional construction into execution whenever the opportunity or emergency may arise for its exercise.

Let us therefore analyze it and be prepared to meet it as a substantive issue which, for the novelty of its conception, and the unmasked boldness of its pretensions, is without a precedent, and I hope without a following among men of either party who have any desire whatsoever to maintain the autonomy of the States or the inviolable character of our Federal institutions. The sum and substance of this revolutionary idea is this: There are certain powers which the Federal Government can not exercise and which nevertheless may be considered necessary for the welfare of the Union. The States, either separately or by concurrent action, could come to the rescue of the Constitution and enact legislation that would afford full and adequate relief for the want of power in the Federal Government, repeating now the identical language that was used—"the people will have the control they need, either from the States or from the National Government, and if the States fail to furnish it in due measure, sooner or later constructions of the Constitution will be found to vest the power where it will be exercised in the National Government." That Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I dislike very much to in- is to say, that this Government is a government of delegated and enumerated powers, and beyond these powers entire and absolute sovereignty rests with the States. The delegated powers are not sufficient to cover the field of national necessity. The States must not permit fleir powers to lie dormant; they must supply the deficiency, and if they fail to do this then the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of the Government will supplement the Constitution and so construe and adapt the delegated powers that they will carry with them the dormant powers of the States that they have failed to put into practical operation.

If such a doctrine as this had obtained in the constitutional convention the Constitution would never have been ratified and we would never have had a Constitution of the United States. And if either Congress or the President or the Supreme Court is to undertake this construction now and assume this unlawful prerogative, then it would become absolutely necessary for us to resolve ourselves into a government of inherent power, with unlimited jurisdiction, and with the reserved rights of the States obliterated and extinguished.

THE RESERVED RIGHTS OF THE STATES.

I shall not enter into an academic discussion upon the reserved rights of the States and the imperishable distinction between these rights and the delegated powers of the Constitution. An incessant flood of political literature-volumes upon volumes, adjudications ranging over a century-and the common consent of the American people have settled the question that we can not and we dare not do what is foreshadowed in this address without subverting the foundation upon which this Republic stands. It would be a perfect waste of time for me to roam over the field of judicial history and present to any intelligent assemblage the cardinal distinctions of the Constitution between delegated and reserved powers. The monotony of such an argument would warn me to desist from pursuing it, and its universal acceptance covered and closed forever by the decisions of the Supreme Court admonishes me that the Senate of the United States desires no presentation upon that subject. What we now want is to meet the menace and the threat that the States shall gradually lose their reserved rights, not because they do not exist, but because such a construction shall be placed upon the enumerated powers of the Federal Government that the local laws and customs and usages of the States that their constitutions and their statutes, that the will of their people as expressed in their conventions and legislative assemblages, that their dormant and unexercised powers, that their failure to provide for the welfare of other States and for the general welfare of the Union-must all give way to this new rule of interpretation and construction which declares that whenever there is a proposition that in the opinion of the ruling powers tends to promote the general welfare of the Union, the actual Federal powers shall be enlarged and strained to such an extent that this Government shall no longer be a government of delegated powers, but shall resolve itself into a centralized despotism without any limitation upon its activities, without any inhibition upon its authority, and without any boundary to its jurisdiction.

THE CONSTITUTION DOES NOT CHANGE WITH CIRCUMSTANCES.

Let it not be supposed for a moment that I am opposed to the most complete execution of all Federal powers vested in the Government under the Constitution. I believe, whenever the emergency arises, in the exhaustion of Federal power for the purpose of meeting it, and the Supreme Court of the United States has never besitated to ratify the doctrine first proclaimed by Marshall in McCulloch v. Maryland:

Let the end be legitimate; let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are apprepriate, which are plainly adapted to that end; which are not prohibited, but consist with the spirit and letter of the Constitution, are constitutional.

When we come to collect taxes, to regulate commerce, to coin money, to restrain the carriers of commerce from extortion and discrimination, to prevent unlawful combinations of centralized wealth from plundering the people, and to exercise every power vested in this Government, I say, as the Supreme Court in unnumbered decisions has declared, that these powers must keep pace with the development of the country, and as it progresses and advances, the subject upon which these powers can operate expands and enlarges so that to-day admittedly the field of their operations has passed beyond contemporaneous construction and covers a territory and a multiplicity of cases that were not and could not have been within the contemplation of the men who framed the Constitution; and every thought that the Secretary has uttered upon this branch of the subject meets with my ready consent, and I proceed with him to the utmost limits of his contention. This is not the point at all upon which We divide upon the point that you can interpolate into the Constitution new powers upon the plea of governmental necessity. I may admit that a uniform divorce law, referred to by the Secretary, would be highly beneficial to society, but I deny that there is any possible method by which we can work it into the Constitution, and when he refers to a uniform insurance law I may admit that such a plan would be entitled to our serious consideration, but I respectfully challenge him to point me to the clause in the instrument that can be construed to cover such a grant.

Let me ask in this connection what about the law that would embrace the right of suffrage? There is the practical danger that confronts us. There is an illustration that comes right within this new canon of construction. Each State has its own statutes regulating the suffrages of its citizens, and without infringing upon the amendments, a number of them have provided for an educational test and property qualifications. In this regard a State is not controlled by what other States may require, nor does the welfare of the Union at all enter into its consideration. It is entirely a question of its own welfare and its own environment and its own safety and its own moral and material progress. I do not for a moment contend that the Secretary would deprive the States of this right, but under his new plan of constitutional construction it would be a simple process to accomplish this result. Does it make any difference that in the case of Miner v. Happersett, in 21 Wallace, the Supreme Court has declared that the Constitution of the United States does not confer the right of suffrage upon anyone, and that in a subsequent case, that of The United States v. Cruikshank, in 92 U. S., the Supreme Court, affirming the earlier case, has again declared that the right to vote in the States comes from the States, and that only the right of exemption from the prohibitive discrimination comes from the United States. House of Representatives to-day, adopting this new rule of constitutional construction, can practically repeal these decisions and decline to admit any member into its body from any Southern State that limits its suffrages to the intelligence of its citizens, upon the plea of governmental-or to be more accurate-of party Thus one by one the reserved rights of the States necessity. would fall and away would go the decisions of a century.

In Texas v. White, in 7 Wallace, the Chief Justice declared that the "maintenance of the government of the States is as much within the design and care of the Constitution as the preservation of the Union and the maintenance of the National

In Ex parte Milligan, in 4 Wallace, the Supreme Court rang this clarion note:

The Constitution never yields to treaty or enactment; it neither changes with time nor does it in theory bend to the force of circumstances; its principles can not be set aside to meet the supposed necessities of great crises; no doctrine involving more pernicious consequences was ever invented by the wit of man than that may of its provisions can be suspended during any of the great exigencies of the Government.

All our judicial history rings with one accord upon this theme from the time that Madison declared that the jurisdiction of this Government extends to certain enumerated objects, and leaves to the several States a residuary and inviolable sovereignty over all other objects, and Hamilton declared that all authority of which the States are not explicitly divested in favor of the Union remains with them down to the day when the Supreme Court proclaimed that the Constitution, in all of its provisions, looks to an indestructible union composed of indestructible States.

This new dispensation, therefore, is at utter war with judicial opinion. It makes a mockery of the unbroken line of adjudications upon the subject. It turns the Constitution into a rhapsody of words; and if the heresy is ever to be accepted by the coming generations, we might as well apply the flames to that great edifice of constitutional thought that it has taken over a century to erect, and level it to the earth in all the symmetry of its proportions.

THE FRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

As I said at the beginning, however, Mr. President, I would not have arisen here to-day at all if it were not for the fact that this doctrine of constitutional perversion is being put into practical operation constantly by those for whom the Secretary is speaking, and whose purpose and design he is so clearly upholding and fortifying, and this brings me to the other branch of the resolution.

I would like it understood that I do not intend in anything I may now say to assail the President of the United States. It is my determined purpose not to do so, and I shall extremely regret it if I deviate therefrom. I esteem him too highly in a great many respects, individually and officially, to be influenced in the slightest degree by personal motives, and I propose to treat him with the courtesy and dignity that my position calls for and that his station entitles him to. Those who know me best know that I am not a partisan in politics, and even if the occasion were present, and fully justified it, I should not make use of this place for the purpose of creating political capital or fomenting party rancor out of any of the facts with which I am about to deal.

I have a great object in view which must not become involved with any element of political bias that would only tend to lower the aspect in which I propose to present it. I am looking to the future and not so much to the present. No journal in the land, if it should honor me by taking any notice of what I am about to say, will charge me, I hope, in my analysis of the President's official methods, in indulging in any criticism that may be objectionable either to him or to that great body of the American people who confide in him and admire him for what he has accomplished for his country. Thus restrained and circumscribed, I shall now proceed to illustrate the proposition that the President of the United States, influenced by honest motives, has nevertheless set an example for future Presidents and future generations that is destructive of our best traditions, that challenges the law, and ignores the limitations of the Constitution, and which, if followed under impulses less sincere and patriotic than his own, would ultimately result in an entire misconception of our form of government upon the part of those who may be called upon to administer it, and would effect a gradual upheaval of the principles that underlie and form the bulwark of our institutions.

THE DIVISION OF LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL POWER.

The imperishable distinction of executive, legislative, and judicial functions is the basic principle that supports the organic law of this land. If there has been any confusion upon this subject it ought to be cleared up; if there is a growing misapprehension among the people in regard to the power of the Executive it ought to be arrested before it makes any further inroads upon their credulity; if there has been any violation of the plain intent and meaning of constitutional requirements it ought to be exposed, and if the people, as has been claimed, are utterly indifferent as to the methods employed whether unconstitutional or not, provided the accomplishment inures to the advantage of the country, then they ought to be aroused from their lethargy and confronted with the traditions of the Republic and the genius of our institutions.

The proposition under consideration goes far beyond the President personally, because it relates to our entire conception of executive duty and of governmental distinctions, and my sole object now in entering upon this investigation is to prevent the present interpretation of Executive authority, as far as it lies within my humble power, from becoming without further question or examination a part of the accepted policy of the country. The President is laboring under the honest impression that he is responsible to the country for the legislation of Congress, and that therefore it is his duty to interfere when its proceedings do not comport with his own ideas as to what is best for the interests of the people, and in accordance with this rule he has ignored not the letter, because that can not be done, but the substance and spirit of the plan of a division of governmental functions as embodied in the Constitution. Of course with an Executive who did not have the welfare of the people at heart such an illusion would be fatal to the stability of the In pursuance of this purpose we have now for the first time in our history a Government practically conducted in nearly all of its departments, with the exception of the judiciary—and even there the encroachment is visible—by the Executive and in conformity with his own ideals and standards. His standards and ideals may be right, and I am satisfied that they are in a number of instances, but I believe, with all the sincerity I possess, that the safety and welfare of the Republic is in danger if the blight of such a policy should be allowed by any insidious process to become engrafted upon our institutions. THE TREATY-MAKING POWER

I shall now take as the first instance where there has been a conflict between executive and legislative functions—the treatymaking power of the President and the Senate. Article sec ond of the Constitution provides that the President shall have power by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to make treaties, provided that two-thirds of the Senators present concur. In the Santo Domingo affair the President has evidently made his own treaty. I am not discussing the proposi-tion whether his views and purposes are right or wrong in reference to Santo Domingo. He may be right—a great many persons think that he is. He may have performed a great pub-lic service for the people of that island and for civilization and humanity in the efforts that he has made to extricate them from their difficulties and misfortunes. This is not the point at The charge that I make is that he has accomplished this in violation of the Constitution, and has set an example for his successors which, if followed, would abrogate the provision that gives this body the right to be consulted in the treatymaking power.

The principal provision of the Santo Domingo treaty relates to the collection of the revenues of the island and their distribution among its creditors. All other parts of the treaty were subordinate to this. What has been done? The treaty has been practically carried into effect without consulting the Senate. The appointment of an American agent as an official of Santo Domingo to collect its customs was simply a cover Under the principles of international law and and an evasion. the comity of nations this Government is morally bound for the proper custody of this fund, and would be liable in case of its waste or loss. After its collection the only act of any consequence that remained to be done was its distribution, and even this has been practically determined upon, I understand, by settlement with her creditors.

Now, when you add to this the fact that our war ships are in the harbors of the island ostensibly for the purpose of protecting American interests, but in reality protecting the officials of the island against any menace from without, and revolution from within, you have the establishment of a sovereignty or a protectorate without a word from Congress or the Senate sanctioning the same. This is called a modus vivendi, but the phrase modus vivendi has no application to a condition of this sort, and is a perfectly meaningless absurdity in this connec-What is being done is the maintenance of a status quo, but a status quo created by the President at the time of the negotiation of the treaty, and without any warrant of law whatsoever. do not believe that in all the archives of the State Department there can be found any precedent for such a proceeding. Any President could at any time, following this example, make an agreement with any foreign country, uphold it by armed intervention, and then if the Senate declined to confirm his action simply announce that he proposed to maintain the status quo or modus vivendi, as it is erroneously called, and thus practically effectuate a treaty whether the Senate consents or not. What the President has done in reference to Santo Domingo he can duplicate any day with respect to any of the bankrupt and revolutionary Republics of Central or South America. appeal to him for help. He may negotiate a treaty and the Senate may decline to act upon the treaty, and in the meantime he may enter into an agreement with them to collect their customs duties, place them on deposit in an American bank, and in the custody of an American representative, and when Congress or the Senate calls him to account he can, with absolute defiance, announce that the work has been done and that it is the duty of this Government to make a proper division of the funds.

When an appeal comes to him from this quarter he can direct our war ships to protect American interests, and incidentally the party in power or the revolutionists friendly to our intervention, and he can assume control over their custom-houses and maintain a financial protectorate over them without a treaty and without constitutional or legislative sanction. This policy may be all right-perhaps the American people are in favor of this new doctrine; it may be a wonderful accomplishment-Central America may profit by it; it may be a great benefit to us commercially and it may be in the interest of civilization, but as a student and follower of the Constitution, I deprecate the methods that have been adopted, and I appeal to you to know whether we propose to sit silently by and by our indifference or tacit acquiescence submit to a scheme that ignores the privileges of this body; that is not authorized by statute; that does not array itself within any of the functions of the Executive; that vests the treaty-making power exclusively in the President, to whom it does not belong; that overrides the organic law of the land and that virtually proclaims to the country that while the other branches of the Government are controlled by the Constitution, that the Executive is above and beyond it, and whenever his own views or policies conflict with it he will find some way to effectuate his purposes uncontrolled by its limitations.

THE JUDICIARY AND THE EXECUTIVE.

Mr. President, I think that the judiciary ought to be entirely free from executive interference. Every person of intelligence must agree with me upon this proposition. The Executive should never, either by approval or criticism, constitute himself a reviewing power over the decisions of the courts. It is, therefore, my judgment that the criticism by the President of Judge Humphrey with reference to his decision in the case known as the Meat Packers' Case, in the Illinois circuit, was uncalled for and an invasion of his judicial prerogatives. I am inclined to think that the decision was correct and would have been sustained upon appeal if an appeal could have been taken; but right or wrong, it did not come within the functions of the President to reprove the judge or animadvert upon his opinion. We can not tolerate such intrusion upon the rights of the courts. The courts are not responsible to any President of the United States for their judgments. The exercise of judicial power is just as distinct from the exercise of executive power as is the exercise of legislative power and the Presidents of the future should be told once and forever that when they enter upon this field they are treading on forbidden ground. I can imagine no condition more intolerable than a system under which the judiciary would feel that their judgments and sentences must conform to the wishes of the Executive, and if they are objectionable to him, that they are subject to his censure and reproof. It was this system that for a time brought shame and dishonor upon the administration of the common law, that permitted the guilty to escape and the innocent to suffer and which filled the courts with cruel, servile judges, and made the arm of justice the adjunct of the Crown to fortify the abuses of the tyrant and suppress the liberty of the subject. A judge would have been perfectly justified if he had declined to submit in silence to the rebuke of the Executive. He could well, with calm and dignified defiance, have proclaimed from the bench, I nm a sovereign here; you have no greater right to interfere with me than I have extrajudically to denounce an act of course as assumention. yours as usurpation.

This is the abode of justice, its ground is sacred, and its altar is inviolable. It is like an Anglo-Saxon home, Domus sua cuique tutissimum refugium, in which the poorest man, though it be the humblest hut or the lowliest hovel, "may challenge all the forces of the Crown to enter. It may be frail. Its roof may shake. The storm may enter, but the King of England can not enter. All his forces dare not cross the threshold of the ruined tenement."

FEDERAL AND STATE FUNCTIONS.

There is another act that the Executive should never undertake, and that is to intrude his presence upon the States in the exercise of their sovereign functions. I send now to the desk of the Secretary to be read the report of an incident which the country seemed to treat with entire indifference, but which at the time it occurred surprised and startled me beyond expression.

BOSTON, June 11.

Governor Guild made public to-day a telegram received by him from President Roosevelt, in which the President, after pointing out that he had been requested to interfere with the execution of Charles L. Tucker, declares that, in his judgment, Governor Guild's decision not to interfere with the carrying out of the sentence on Tucker seemed to him entirely sound and commanded his hearty sympathy.

Tucker is under sentence of death this week, probably to-night, for the murder of Mabel Page at Weston, on March 31, 1904. President Roosevelt's telegram follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,

THE WHITE HOUSE, Washington, June 10.

Governor Curtis Guild, Boston, Mass .:

Governor Curtis Guild, Boston, Mass.:

Have been requested on behalf of certain parties in Boston to interfere with the execution of Tucker, it being alleged that it is my duty so to do inasmuch as I have the power under the Federal laws.

No showing has been made to me that I have such power, but, without regard to this, I desire to state to you that, in my judgment, your decision not to interfere with the carrying out of the sentence of Tucker seems to me entirely sound and commands my hearty sympathy. It seems particularly a case in which there should be no interference with the carrying out of the sentence.

Theodore Roosevell. THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

I never knew a communication of this sort to be sent by a President to the governor of a State since the foundation of the Republic, and, for the President's sake and in his interest, I deeply regret and deplore the occurrence. . What does this mean, and what are we coming to? Certain citizens of Massachusetts had petitioned the President to come to the rescue of a prisoner who had been convicted of a capital crime in the State of Massachusetts, and upon whom sentence was about to be executed. I know nothing of the guilt or innocence of the person; he may have been guilty, or he may have been innocent; if innocent, he is not the first innocent man who has been deprived of his liberty or his life under the laws of the land. What was the President's plain and unmistakable duty in the premises? I am willing to admit that the President in his individual capacity had a perfect right to examine the case, and if he believed that an innocent man had been sentenced to death it would have been his duty and his privilege, not as President, but just as it would have been the duty and privilege of any person, to interest himself in his behalf. I have never known the day when I would not have been willing, if I thought a man had been unjustly convicted, to use every effort to obtain justice for him. I believe there is a law of God and humanity higher and more imperative than the law of the State.

But what did the President do in this case? In an official or quasi official document, headed at the White House, he indites letter to Governor Guild of Massachusetts, who had not written to him at all, in which he intervenes in the proceedings, sympathizes with the governor heartily in carrying out the sentence, and decides that it is a case in which there should be no interference by the governor, giving practically the official sanction of the President of the United States to the act of the governor of Massachusetts in declining to interfere with the judgment of the court.

would have been in extremely good taste for Governor Guild to have respectfully remitted this telegram to the President with a caution that he did not request the President's opinion in the case, nor the sanction of his high station, to the carrying out of the execution. Now I am not speaking as a party man, and surely, as I have said, I am not actuated by any feeling of hostility toward the President, because there is no one even upon the Republican side of this Chamber who is willing to give him greater credit for the accomplishments he has wrought for the people of this country than I am; but I shall turn now to members of the Republican party upon this floor, and ask them in all candor whether this was not a grave error upon the part of the President. I ask them, if any of them occupied the place the President does would they, solicited or unsolicited, have sent a communication of this sort to the governor of any State in this Union? I will go further than this and appeal to the President himself to reflect upon this incident and give it his serious consideration, and then determine whether as a student of our institutions he would not deprecate and condemn an act of this sort upon the part of any one whatever connected with any department of the Federal administration.

Of course I will admit that there was no technical violation of any provision of the Constitution, but I appeal now not to ignorance, not to drones and idlers slumbering in apathy and indifference, but to the thought and manhood of my countrymen, irrespective of parties, to know whether we can afford to establish a precedent like this or permit it to go unnoticed. In my judgment it involves a most serious proposition. It practically announces that the acts of State officials are subject to the approval or displeasure of the Federal Government; it obliterates the line between the two; it announces to the governor of every State that if he is in doubt about the performance of some act confided to his supreme authority that he can appeal to the President for guidance; it makes the President the arbiter and umpire in controversies beyond the utmost pale of his jurisdiction; it invests the minds of the rising generation who are studying the framework of our institutions and analyzing their delicate combination with an erroneous idea as to their scope and character; it extends the President's influence into spheres of action entirely beyond the province of his allotted and delegated functions; it makes a gaping wound in the heart of the Constitution, and if extended to its logical limit it dispels the doctrine of reserved rights and enumerated powers and makes the functionaries of sovereign States the agents and deputies of Executive dictation.

CONGRESS AND THE EXECUTIVE.

We come now to another and a different scene. The pivotal point around which the railroad rate bill revolved for months in this Chamber was the character of review that the courts were to assume under its provisions. One side claimed that the courts should only exercise a constitutional review under the fifth amendment; the other side advocated a full statutory review from the proceedings of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The President came into the game early. We realize that no fight is thoroughly equipped upon this floor unless the President is in it. He longs for a fight as the hart panteth after the It was a match to the finish between the senior water brooks. Senator from Rhode Island and the President. They stood respectively in the foremost ranks of their profession. tor from Rhode Island was an expert in the ring and had upon many an occasion in this arena been awarded the victor's prize. The President, also, was a dean in the art, and had reached a degree of eminence in his calling that made him a dangerous foe to encounter. It was a most interesting spectacle. The Senator from Rhode Island time and time again went down beneath the ponderous blows of his opponent, but each time he arose like Aurora, the goddess of the dawn, arose from her chariot in the sea. At length science commenced to tell. The Senator from Rhode Island had reserved his strength for the last encounter. The President had changed his tactics so often that he became exhausted and appealed for help. One morning the Senator from Rhode Island appeared in this Chamber with a radiant smile. The President had never penetrated the meaning of that It had lured him like the sirens lure their victims to smile. destruction. The smile indicated that the tournament was over. The Senator from South Carolina looked upon the other side of the Chamber for his promised troops, but they had fled and vanished. An ex-Senator from New Hampshire lay dead upon the field. The President lay entangled in his armor, and his breastplate and his battle-ax were shattered, and above him waved the pennant of Rhode Island, and the Senator from Rhode Island smiled. If the President had only kept out of this fray it would have assumed an entirely different form and ended in an entirely different way. It was impossible, however, for him to do this. He could not remain quiescent in the White House and observe a great struggle like this progressing without taking part in it. So that he got into it, it really did not make much difference to him upon which side he was enlisted. One day he was upon one side and the next day he was upon the other.

Here we were day after day struggling with questions of constitutional law, as if we really had anything to do with their settlement, laboring under the vain delusion that we had the right to legislate; that we were an independent branch of the Government; that we were one department, and the executive another, each with its separate and well-defined distinctions, imagining these things, and following a vision and a mirage, while the President was at work dominating the legislative will, interposing his offices into the law-making power, assuming legislative rights to a greater extent than he could possibly do if he were sitting here as a member of this body; dismembering the Constitution, and exercising precisely and identically the same power and control as if the Constitution had declared that Congress shall pass no law without the consent of the President; adopting a system that practically blends and unites legislative and executive functions, a system that prevailed in many of the ancient governments that have forever gone to ruin, and which to-day still obtains in other governments, the rebellious protests of whose subjects are echoing over the earth, and whose tottering fabrics I hope are on the rapid road to dissolution.

THE POWER OF THE PRESIDENT

If I were called upon to select the most wonderful exhibition of the President's power that has occurred within my experience, I would take our action upon the canal bill at the close of the last session of Congress. This was an achievement in which his consummate skill in propelling legislation appeared in its most perfect proportions. We had all heard the argument of the junior Senator from South Dakota in favor of a sea-level canal, and its demonstrative facts and unanswerable logic seemed to carry conviction with its presentation.

All at once a wireless message came from the White House. The President had determined that there was either to be a lock canal or that there should be no legislation upon the subject. I can never forget the day upon which the vote was taken. The biography of the President will perhaps some day be written by the senior Senator from Massachusetts. Macaulay said that if Boswell had not been the greatest fool who ever lived, he could not have given to the world the greatest biography that was ever written. This will not apply to the Senator from Massachusetts. He wields a master's hand in biographical literature, and when he writes this biography I hope that he will dwell with glowing emphasis upon this surpassing accom-Napoleon at Austerlitz never turned the scales of fortune with greater celerity of movement or audacity of assault than the President threw into this maneuver. How was it done? What subtle force did he employ in the execution of his plan? The day the vote was taken this Chamber presented a most peculiar aspect. The air seemed laden with some narcotic wafting its somniferous essence over this body. When the roll was called the clerk could hardly hear the responses upon the side of the lock canal, and as the answers came they came in whispered accents and with bated breath. The charm had done its work, the deadly vapor had benumbed our faculties and made us pliant slaves to the master will. Even the senior Senator from Obio who, when his convictions are aroused, has often on this floor displayed the Nemean lion's nerve, fell a victim to the magic power of the love charm that had been concocted at the laboratory of the White House. I would like the Secretary to read a few of the pathetic and funereal passages of the Senator's deliverance upon this occasion.

It shows how the dominating spirit of the President can ride the whirlwind when he has made up his mind to legislate, and how in absolute defiance of the laws of nature he can produce a senatorial vacuum beneath the sweep of his mighty

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss this question beyond saying something similar to that which has just been said by the Senator from West Virginia.

"I remember, when the proposition was before the Senate some time ago, as to whether we should adopt the Panama or the Nicaragua route, I was greatly influenced in favor of the Panama route, as no doubt many other Senators were by the fact stated at page 11, according to the print I have before me, of Report 783, part 2, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, where the Interoceanic Canal Committee, or a majority at least of its members—"

Mr. Kittreege. A minority.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; it was a minority report I was looking to see. A minority of the members of that committee set forth the advantages of the Panama route, as contrasted with the Nicaragua route, and then, after they had enumerated nine specific advantages, they added the following:

"10. It is recognized that then, after they had enumerated nine specific advantages, they added the following:

"10. It is recognized that a sea-level canal is the ideal. The Panama Canal may be either constructed as a sea-level canal or may be subsequently converted into one. On the other hand, no sea-level canal will ever be possible on the Nicaragua route."

Now, like the Senator from West Virginia, I had remained of the idea ever since until within the last two or three months, when this discussion was commenced, that it was the part of wisdom to build a sea-level canal, and I supposed that would be the result of the investigations that were being made by the committee. I did not have time, because occupied with other work, to follow the hearings before that committee and read the testimony as it was taken and printed from day to day for the benefit of the committee and for the benefit of Senators.

I was therefore somewhat unprepared when, a few days ago, it was insisted that we should settle this matter at this time by voting upon it. I then made a request that there might be further time than was proposed to be given us in order that we might investigate this subject and read the testimony to obtain further information.

But we are to vote, and every Senator must speak for himself in a few minutes. There is no time to investigate further, and I propose, although with some misgiving as to whether that is the wisest thing to do, to follow what has been indicated as the preference of those who have the greatest responsibility with respect to this canal.

As I have intimated before in reference to this matter. I did not

As I have intimated before in reference to this matter, I did not take the floor for the purpose of discussing it. I only took the floor to express the doubt I have and the regret I have that I can not vote as I propose to vote with greater satisfaction to myself.

THE CASE OF ADMIRAL SCHLEY.

I come now to an incident which I would prefer not to allude It bears, however, so directly upon the proposition that I am discussing that I think it is my duty to make reference to it. It illustrates in a marked degree, more than any other episode of the present Administration, that in the exercise of his prerogative the President does not feel himself bound by law or precedent whenever he is in pursuit of an object that it is his purpose to accomplish. After the court of inquiry had passed upon the case of Admiral Schley an appeal was taken by the Admiral to the President under the regulations of the Naval Code. There was an enormous record in the case, and it was the duty of the President to decide upon the record and the testimony that it contained. He occupied the same position as the finders of an appellate tribunal do when they are reviewing the decision of an inferior jurisdiction. Assuming now that he had the right to reopen the case and take testimony upon his own motion, he had of course no right to do this except in the presence of Admiral Schley or his counsel, and with their right to cross-examine any witness that was produced. The American bar, or that portion of the bar unacquainted with this pro-ceeding, will hardly believe it until they read it, that the President conducted this appeal in utter disregard of the rights of Admiral Schley, ignoring every principle of common law and statutory procedure, and in violation at least of the spirit of the Constitution, which provides that in all criminal prosecutions "the accused shall be confronted with the witnesses against him and have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor."

No one can doubt that this was in the nature of a criminal proceeding, although not within the letter of the Constitution. The penalties and punishment attending a decision against the accused were as severe as any that could be inflicted for a violation of any of the laws of his country. The President never gave the admiral the slightest notice that he intended to reopen the case; never confronted him with the witnesses against him; never allowed him any process for obtaining witnesses in his behalf, and never permitted the assistance of any counsel for the defense. In fact, Admiral Schley never received the slightest warning or notice that his case was to be reopened or treated de novo in relation to any of the issues involved.

The most important question in the case was in relation to the command at Santiago on the day of the battle. When the appeal came before the President, he summoned the captains of the squadron and ex parte, without any trial or opportunity, of defense, upon their uncorroborated testimony, which was excluded at the hearing before the court of inquiry, rendered a decision adverse to Admiral Schley upon all the points in controversy. If the admiral had been present either in person or by counsel, or had been allowed to offer any testimony, he could easily have discredited and impeached the evidence against him. Such a trial as this, if it can be dignified by the name of trial, never took place in any civilized country upon the pages of history since the court of star chamber, unfettered by the rules of law, and employed by James I. and Charles I. to arrest the advance of civil and religious liberty, was relegated to infamy and oblivion.

Captain Evans, the principal witness against Admiral Schley, was his bitter and malignant foe. He testified before the President that he considered himself under the command of Admiral Sampson throughout the battle, and that he would not have heeded any orders from the Brooklyn even if he had received them. The President had before him 50 pages of testimony demonstrating with mathematical accuracy that Admiral Sampson could not possibly have been in command of the battle, as he was over 10 miles distant from the scene of action when the battle began, and never made his appearance until the battle was over, and an hour and a quarter after the last of the ships, the Cristobal Colon, had struck her colors and surrendered.

The proof was overwhelming that the distance at this time between the flagship of Admiral Sampson and the Brooklyn was fully 17 miles, and that Admiral Sampson was not and could not have been in command when the battle took place. If Captain Evans was testifying truthfully when he stated to the President that he would not have heeded any orders from the Brooklyn, the President should have immediately ordered a court-martial in the case, because Admiral Schley was the senior officer of the squadron under the rules of warfare, and under the statutes of the United States, and under its naval regulations when the Spanish ships attempted to escape upon the morning of July 3, and it was the duty of Captain Evans, whether he wanted to do so or not, to heed and follow his

On the morning of July 3, at 10 o'clock, Admiral Sampson signaled to the fleet, "Disregard the motions of the Commander in Chief," and according to the regulations for the government of the Navy of the United States the command from that moment devolved upon Admiral Schley. I shall not enter upon any of the details of this case to any further extent, and I have only adverted to the statement of Captain Evans to show the kind of testimony that influenced the mind of the President and the error that he committed in violation of the cardinal principles of the common law in not permitting Admiral Schley to be confronted by the witnesses who were against him, and who had been summoned by the President to testify to facts that were ruled out at the hearing.

It must be observed that the few officers whose testimony bore against Admiral Schley before the President were his personal enemies, and did not want him to receive any credit for his conduct at Santiago. In fact, long before the battle they had been hostile to him and envious of him. They had stood like "greyhounds in the slips, straining upon the start."

The President says that "this controversy should not be kept alive; to do so would merely do damage to the Navy and the country." It shall, however, be kept alive. The conviction of an innocent man is of more concern and importance to the country than the repose and security of a naval ring, however influential and powerful it may be. Men stood ready in the Senate and House of Representatives to rectify this wrong at the time the President rendered his decision, and were prepared to pass some legislative action that would strike this judgment from the naval records of the country, but the President had said that there should not be any further agitation of this controversy, and thus in his legislative capacity he procured a silent confirmation of the judgment he had rendered in his executive capacity. Let me tell you that the agitation will not cease. The time will come when this case shall be reopened, just as a similar case has recently been reopened in another land, where an innocent man had been hunted to torment and degradation by the scorpions of religious hatred and venom until, to the eternal credit of a liberty-loving people, his sentence reversed, his innocence established, his loyalty vindicated, and his name restored to the roll of honor, he stands to-day exalted by the ordeal through which he has passed, the pride of France and the idol of his countrymen.

Admiral Schley shall be heard. Living or dead, his cause shall be heard. I have never known an injustice of this sort to have been done that the occasion did not arise to redress it. No such melancholy page as this shall blur the annals of our history. It is said that the public opinion of the country is with Admiral Schley and that he has been honored with its verdict. This is true, but it will not suffice. We know that public opinion changes very quickly. It will not do to rely upon it. To-day it sends forth its anathemas of hate, to-morrow it builds its monuments of love. The march to immortality is often amid the poisoned shafts of envy and of malice, and the birthplace of a deathless name is generally amid the ruins of public opinion.

The public opinion of future ages will not be guided by what the public opinion of this hour is, because it will have no means of ascertaining it except from the record, and the record is against him. Other countries remember and dignify their heroes, but in this case Schley was humiliated by the President's suggestion that he "ought not to have weighed danger, and that it was his trade to dare greatly for the honor of the

The heroes of antiquity were always worshiped and exalted. Greece inscribed their names and deeds in her temples and upon her shrines. "Such honors Ilion to her heroes paid." To this day there can be seen a representation of the triumphant entry of Titus into Rome upon a marble arch erected in his honor by the Roman senate seventy years after the Christian era. Schley might well exclaim in his retirement to the Republic: "Oh, Ingratitude, thou marble-hearted fiend." But he thinks none the less of his country because of the treatment he has received. 'The man who at Santiago, according to the testimony, stood at an exposed position upon his vessel, with his head erect, when every head was bowed but his, as the enemy's shells were plowing his ship, should not have been thus reproached, and if his own country is cruel and forgetful enough to punish him for his love and sacrifice for her, then I predict that the day will come when at least his countrymen will erect some imperishable memorial whose inscription will not only attest his valorous deeds to all enduring time, but will obliterate the admonition now written upon the naval records of the country that war is a trade, and it was his duty to dare greatly for the honor of the flag, a flag he had carried from the Orient to the Arctic sea, and to whose colors he was as true "as the needle to the pole or the dial to the sun."

THE NEW SCHOOL OF POLITICAL SCRIBES.

Now let us look for a moment at the result of the President's construction of his prerogative. A new sect of political scribes have commenced to edit a revised edition of the Constitution. They call it the unwritten Constitution. They are framing an apocryphal collection of epistles and are promulgating their heresy from academic chairs and lecture platforms. The President is the prophet of this new creed and the Messiah of this strange hallucination. They do not propose to add any additional chapters to the original manuscript, but they insist that under the general-welfare clause, which is simply a repeti-tion of the phrase that was used in the Articles of Confederation, this Government has implied powers not enunciated in the charter. They seem to forget that Hamilton's proposition in the Constitutional Convention which provided that Congress was to have power to pass all laws whatsoever, subject to the Executive veto, and the outline that he communicated to Mr. Madison that the Legislature of the United States shall have power to pass all laws which they shall judge necessary to the common defense and welfare of the Union, were not even referred to the committee, and that it was in the plan presented by Patterson and by Randolph and by Pinckney that there was finally evolved that immortal scheme that can never be recast under the plastic touch of political necromancers and enchanters.

When they approach the executive department the implication becomes unlimited, and under the distribution of Executive power the President can perform all functions not allotted to other branches of the Government.

I know that Congress has enacted a great many laws enabling the President to perform the duties confided to him by the Constitution. It has done this under Article I, section 8, subsection 18, of the Constitution, which provides that-Congress shall have power * * * to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

Hamilton, in discussing this clause of the Constitution, said

The declaration itself, though it may be chargeable with tautology or redundancy, is at least perfectly harmless.

There has been a considerable diversity of opinion upon this point. Chief Justice Marshall illumined the proposition in this manner. He said:

Should Cengress in the execution of its powers adopt measures which are prohibited by the Constitution, or should Congress, under the pretext of executing its powers, pass laws for the accomplishment of objects not entrusted to the Government, it would become the painful duty of this tribunal, should a case requiring such a decision come before it, to say that such an act was not the law of the land. But where the law is not prohibited, and is really calculated to effect any of the objects entrusted to the Government, to undertake here to inquire into the degree of its necessity would be to pass the line which circumscribes the judicial department, and to trend on legislative ground. This court disclaims all pretensions to such a power.

And there I stand. No one at this day would demand a literal construction of the Constitution which would deprive the President of performing functions necessary to carry out the powers that are granted to him; on the contrary, he has the broadest field of discretion within which to adopt and exercise whatever methods are proper for this purpose. What I insist upon and contend for is that he must never abuse his constitutional prerogative by invading the domain of other departments, and must never, under color of title, assume authority upon subjects that have no relation to his office, and do not in the remotest degree appertain to the performance of his executive functions.

We know that every word of the Constitution is written. know that there is not a line or letter that anyone has the right to insert. The Supreme Court may interpret, it may construe according to the spirit, but it can never add to the text. The Supreme Court may hold that a given act of the Executive is not an interference with legislative functions. It may broaden the right of the President to negotiate a treaty, but if it were ever to decide that the President had a right to conclude a treaty without the constitutional ratification its adjudication would lead either to impeachment or revolution. Every judgment, decree, and order that it renders must be under, and not above and beyond, the Constitution. It can set aside an act of Congress, but it can not abridge or extend the limits of the charter. What the Supreme Court can not do by expression the Executive ought not to be allowed to do by implication.

The President has the right to veto any enactment that we may pass. He has the right, if he chooses to do so, to advise with members in reference to legislation, and to make any suggestions that he may deem proper. This is not a constitutional prerogative, and its propriety has been questioned and assailed, but I am willing within proper bounds to regard it as an incident of his executive functions. One thing he has no right to do, and that is to use the vast public patronage at his disposal to compel obedience to his views. Another thing he has no right to do, and that is to make compacts with the Speaker of the House of Representatives or its committees, to accomplish the legislation that he desires, or prevent legislation. And still another thing he has no right to do, and that is beyond his messages, in which he is given the right at any time to suggest any measure he may deem proper or necessary, to interfere with legislation and to force Congress either to adopt his recommendations or if it rejects them to bring about a breach between the legislative and executive departments that is detrimental to the best interests of the country; that constitutes an assumption of dictatorial power which the people of this Republic, in the course of time, will not submit to, I care not how great the achievement or how much it may conduce to their progress and welfare, or what benefit, advantage, or prosperity we may derive from its accomplishment.

THE CHAMPION OF THE NEW SCHOOL.

In order to show that I have not at all exaggerated the claims and pretensions of this new school of Executive construction, I want now to refer to some extracts from the address of an eminent lawyer, delivered before the New York State Bar Association, in which the doctrines of this creed are announced in such unmistakable and unambiguous terms that we are no longer left in any doubt or uncertainty as to the evolution and development that we are undergoing upon the cardinal principles of republican government. If the propositions that he maintains reflect the sentiment of the people, then it is safe to say that the Constitution is a thing of shreds and patches, and the Government that it created is as much of a monarchical institution as the Government of Great Britain, or of any other government, with the exception perhaps of those of Russia and Turkey, upon the Continent of Europe.

Listen now for a moment to some of the passages from this delightful dissertation upon the Executive prerogative.

delightful dissertation upon the Executive prerogative.

1. The President is the chief invention of the Constitution, a personal magistrate for a republic. * * The conversion of an abstract sovereignty into a concrete sovereign.

2. The executive and magisterial attributes of the Government being invested in the President, it follows inevitably that the President must possess the executive and magisterial attributes of the people, and that the people retain no undelegated attributes or passive sovereignties under the tenth amendment or otherwise.

3. If Southern States abridge the privileges and immunities of Federal negro citizens, the President, on his own initiative, can and should prohibit such action, whether Congress legislates on the subject or not. If Southern States deny the right of suffrage to Federal negro citizens on the ground of race or color, the President, without waiting for penalizing statutes, can and should use every means, civil, military, or both, to stop it.

4. To execute all his omnipotent functions the people have given the President absolute control of an irresistible physical force, the Army and Navy of $0,000,000 people.

5. Such are the powers of the President, express and implied. They are all plenary. The office and power to execute it are in unqualified language. The power to execute the Constitution is without limitation or restriction. The power to administer the executive sovereignties is complete, and the implied powers are coextensive with the express grants. Hence all the powers of the President are unqualified, plenary, and unlimited.

And now for some of the thrilling climaxes of this remarkable

And now for some of the thrilling climaxes of this remarkable

Thus my ideal of the President coincides with the ideal of the people, a majestic constitutional figure uncontrolled by Congress, unrestrained by the courts, vested with plenary constitutional power and absolute constitutional discretion,

How, then, is it possible for the President to exceed his express constitutional authority? What Federal act can he perform that he may not claim is in execution of his office and its attributes, of the Constitution and the laws, or of his executive powers?

Majesty is another attribute. It inheres in every sovereign, be he Czar or President. Imperium majestasque populi Romani.

The President is invested with an office and the whole of it * * *. Who hath fixed its bounds? Who hath said, Thus far and no farther? No one has determined its illimitable extent; no one can determine it so long as the Republic endures.

And this matchless congloweration of incoherent absurdition

And this matchless conglomeration of incoherent absurdities was delivered, Mr. President, before an assemblage, every man of whom was probably conversant with the authorities and decisions that have consistently placed the brand of judicial condemnation upon this frenzied exposition of executive sovereignty.

PERVERSION OF THE CONSTITUTION.

This demonstrates, Mr. President, that the entire trouble arises from the fact that the Constitution is being perverted upon the grant of executive power. Article II of the Constitution says the executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. This does not vest executive power in any greater degree than Article I vests legislative power when it says that all legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, or than Article III vests judicial power except in the Supreme Court of the United

I plant myself upon the proposition that the President derives no authority whatever from this clause. Nearly threequarters of a century ago the greatest political philosophers who ever illustrated the pages of American history settled before ever illustrated the pages of American instory settled before this body this contention so that it has been considered a con-stitutional axiom until the present day. This provision of the Constitution simply relates to the distribution of governmental functions and can not be considered in the light of a grant.

As luminous a constitutional argument as Webster ever made was upon this precise point. The President must derive his authority from the subsequent provisions of the instrument that contain the grant, and the entire grant of power, and which are not in the slightest degree enlarged by the clause that I have quoted. His school of disciples evidently think that I am wrong upon this point and are bewildering the mind of the rising generation upon this proposition. If we were to pass a law here to-day reposing in the President a governmental function beyond the specifications of the Constitution and not necessary for the exercise of any power contained in the speci-fications, the enactment would be void. Now, if the law would be void, what power has the President without the sanction of law to trespass beyond the confines of his prerogative? The President is either the executive officer of the Government. vested with unlimited executive functions, or he is the Executive acting under special and delegated powers. Which is he? Is he the general executive agent of the people, or their immediate representative, as was once claimed by one of his predecessors who also had an erroneous conception of his prerogative, or is he a special agent who shall look to his commission and credentials for his authority? There are unlimited execu-tive acts performed by monarchical rulers, the exercise of which the framers of the Constitution never intended to repose in the President, and therefore they circumscribed his functions.

I am aware that persons who are not familiar with the source of organic power are losing sight of fundamental distinctions and are looking to results and not instrumentalities. I am not surprised at this view, but I am surprised that any men occupying the highest positions in the Government and instructors and text writers upon constitutional law should at this hour justify a doctrine that strikes down at its very altar the oracle of our faith and substitutes for it a worship that is only temporary and that can not possibly continue and endure. The day will come, Mr. President, I predict it-it is bound to come-when this illusion will disappear, when the people will retrace their steps, and as they flee from the pagan temple they will bear upon their shoulders the ark of the covenant and the scroll of #### the ancient law.

THE HOPE OF DEMOCRACY.

I am now about to conclude. I do not know that anyone will heed anything that I have said or that when once it is buried among the sepulchral archives of this assemblage that anyone will read the admonition that I have cast upon the tide of thought, but I desired for my own satisfaction to throw out the warning and intimation that I have given so that in the future when these questions are discussed and studied I can feel that I have performed my duty in helping to pioneer the way for the investigation.

I believe that if the Democratic party would take up as its battle cry the reserved rights of the States and the inviolate constitutional distinction of the legislative, the judicial, and the executive departments, that we could rally around the doctrine the intelligent suffrages of our countrymen. These provisions constitute the logic and the philosophy of the instrument. I can not quite agree with Gladstone that the American Constitution is the most wonderful work ever struck off in a given time by the brain and purpose of man. I can not agree with him because we all know that the Constitution was not a spontaneous production, but was the result of compromise and of violent and heated controversy. We know that the conflict in the convention at one stage was so irrepressible and the crisis so serious that it became necessary for Benjamin Franklin, who was not renowned for his piety or celebrated for his devotion, to move that in future the sessions be opened with We also know another fact, and that is, that there never was the slightest division upon the proposition that I have just been arguing and that so soon as the convention was assembled and organized the first formal resolution that was presented reads as follows:

That a national government ought to be established consisting of separate legislative, executive, and judicial departments.

And from that day to the advent of the present Administration no one has ever doubted the supreme wisdom of this dis tinction. This is the theory toward which every other article in the Constitution gravitates as the center of attraction. this imperishable distinction more than any other provision that the instrument contains that makes the Constitution of the United States now read in every living language and at every university, college, and seat of learning where political science is taught. Not only this, but it is perused with fear and trembling by tyrants upon their tottering thrones. To-day in the Persian palace, in a land which for over two thousand years has been under the dominion of despots, it is an object lesson as the dawn of republican government is breaking over that benighted sphere. It is studied in the camp of the revolutionist and by the glimmering light in the dungeon of the political convict and by exiled philosophers in penal colonies and in Siberian mines, and at this hour it is the subject of meditation and analysis at every place where freemen assemble to assert the rights that God has given them and which it lies not in the power of any man to deprive them of.

I know it is said that the people do not care, if the accomplishment is for their benefit, what the methods are that are employed to reach it, and whether the Constitution is violated The end justifies the means. I do not believe it. I do not believe that the people are in favor of tampering with the Constitution, and, by insidious inroads upon its provisions, paving the way for dictatorial government, At present both parties are cutting loose from its anchorage. The Republican party has in the President a helmsman bold and tactical, who with his chart of aggression and annexation is steering for foreign shores, gamboling on the waves indifferent as to the depths beneath; the Democratic party at the present time, it seems to me, is on the wild and tumultuous sea, with different pilots, all trying to steer it in opposite directions, and if it does not quickly take its bearings I fear that it will gradually drift toward that bourn from which no traveler ever returns.

Mr. President, this division of governmental power into executive, legislative, and judicial functions is the arch that supports the bridge of the Constitution. Underneath it is the chasm in which every government of antiquity that has ignored this distinction lies buried in wreck and ruin. Touch not the arch; if we do the masonry will crumble and the entire fabric will "haste to swift decay." Keep the keystone inviolate and intact, so that no sacrilegious hand shall blast or hew it down, and the whole majestic structure shall time defy, as rocks resist the billows and the sky.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland
[Mr. RAYNER] referred to me in very complimentary terms, with the expression of the hope that I might be the President's biographer. I was reminded irresistibly of a story told me by my former colleague, Senator Hoar, who had introduced a bill in which he was deeply interested and which had been referred to Mr. Evarts, the author, I think, of the maxim that "Any question would settle itself if it were left alone long enough." Mr. Evarts took no action on the bill. One day Mr. Hoar met him in the lobby and said: "By the way, Mr. Evarts, I wish when you report that bill you would notify my executors. They would be gentlemen whom I shall be delighted to meet." [Laughter.] I have not any question that the Senator from Maryland and his associates on that side would be delighted to meet the President's biographer.

Mr. RAYNER. I should like to say to the Senator from Massachusetts

Mr. LODGE. I did not interrupt the Senator, and he will oblige me if he will allow me to proceed.

Mr. RAYNER. I would rather read the President's autobiography than his biography by the Senator from Massachusetts. No one thinks more of the President than I do

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts declines to yield.

Mr. LODGE. I think I might be allowed to finish. I shall have but a few minutes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. LODGE. I do not intend, Mr. President, to enter upon any defense of the President. None is needed to-day, for I think I have rarely heard a greater tribute to his power, popularity, and success than has been delivered by the Senator from Maryland this morning.

Nor do I desire to discuss the separation of powers among the different departments of the Government. I believe most firmly in the necessity of that great principle. I go, indeed, a little in the necessity of that great principle. I go, indeed, a little further, I think, in that direction than the Senator from Maryland. I not only think the executive should not interfere with the legislative or judicial branches, but I do not think the legislative should interfere with the executive or the judicial.

I share the Senator's reverence for the Constitution. I do not know whether "tyrants read it on their tottering thrones' not, but I know that it has been the great instrument, as interpreted by Marshall and his successors, under which this country has grown to be a great and powerful nation.

The Senator said-and this is all I desire to refer to-that out of many illustrations he had selected a few to show where the President had invaded the province of other departments of the Government. There were one or two cases where it seemed to me the selection had not been happy and where his statement of the case appeared to me to convey a slightly erroneous im-

In regard to Santo Domingo, the President has made a treaty in the ordinary and usual form and submitted it to the Senate of the United States, where it now is. Those Senators who have introduced in a very novel way party politics and a party caucus into the consideration of our foreign relations are better able to explain than I why that treaty still remains on the Executive Calendar unacted upon. The treaty is here, as I have said, in regular form. The President has made no "modus vivendi" with Santo Domingo nor any arrangement with that Republic. The Republic of Santo Domingo passed a decree for The Republic of Santo Domingo passed a decree for the administration of the customs and asked the President to nominate some officer or some American citizen to take charge of the custom-houses of Santo Domingo pending the consideration of the treaty.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts will kindly suspend while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. Table Calendar No. 21, Senate resolution

214, by Mr. Carter.

Mr. CARTER. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. LODGE. In accordance with the request of the Government of the Dominican Republic, an officer was appointed, who has taken charge of those revenues, paying a part of them over to the Government of the island and depositing a portion of them to the credit of the island with a trust company in New York, where they now are. There has been no objection to the arrangement in Santo Domingo, at whose request it was made, and the President has made no agreement with them. He has simply complied with the request made by them formally in a published decree settling the distribution of the revenues while the treaty was pending in the Senate.

The Senator also referred to my State and a telegram of the President to the governor of Massachusetts. case was one which caused great excitement. There was great pressure for the pardon of the convicted men. made to get the President to interfere in that matter. The crime was committed in the State. It was dealt with by the courts of the State. The Federal Government had nothing on earth to do with it. The appeal, however, was made to the President. He declined to interfere on the precise ground that he had no power to interfere in a matter so peculiarly belonging to a State as this conviction in a State court.

Yet the Senator blames him for a refusal to interfere where his power did not permit him to interfere, because he expressed to the governor his approbation of the governor's action. The governor of Massachusetts took that action, as I have said, when there was a great pressure upon him. He did his duty as he saw it in a fearless and high-minded way, one much to be commended; and the President, who happened to be his personal friend, in declining to interfere expressed his approbation, as any man had the right to express his approbation or disapprobation of the governor's conduct.

As to the rate law, Mr. President, the Senator described the contest which we had here last winter over that famous measure in beautiful if somewhat mingled metaphors. showed that this encroaching President was defeated, as I understood him. But it appeared to me, Mr. President, that the real trouble in regard to the rate law, which haunts the mind of the Senator from Maryland and his Democratic colleagues, was that the Republican party united to pass the bill in agreement with the President as to the terms in which it should be enacted, and that that caused disappointment to some of our friends of the opposite party, from which they have not yet entirely recovered.

As so much has been said about the President's reaching out for new and extended power, I wish to call attention—and then I shall conclude—to the fact that nothing the President has ever proposed, no policy that he has ever suggested, has gone so far, in my judgment, toward the destruction not only of the Constitution, but of our whole system of government, as the policy advocated in New York by the great leader of the Democratic party-that the Government should own the railroads of the

That, Mr. President, goes much further than a doubtful interpretation or even a violation of the Constitution, for it strikes at the very foundations of State and national governments alike, on which our whole system has been built up. It is not a question as between State and nation. It is a question as to what our government shall be—whether it shall be the limited and free government under which we have lived both in State and nation, and lived in prosperity and power for these hundred years and more, or whether we shall change our whole system of government from top to bottom in State and nation into an open and avowed socialism. The President of the United States, so berated here to-day for having gone beyond his constitutional powers, is an opponent of the ownership of railroads or of all public utilities by government, believing that those should remain within individual and private ownership regulated and supervised by the State. It is from the party to which the Senator belongs that the policy emanates which would take over into the possession of the State and national governments the ownership and absolute control of every railroad in the country.

Mr. WHYTE obtained the floor. Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the junior Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WHYTE. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. By virtue of an understanding, we waived the call of the regular order in order that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] might present a matter. I would not be willing to postpone the consideration of the regular order longer than is necessary for the junior Senator from Maryland to present a matter which, if it leads to discussion, I shall ask to have laid aside.

Mr. CARMACK. Will the Senator from Maryland yield to me for just a word?

Mr. WHYTE. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in response to what the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] said in reference to the terrible consequences to follow if Mr. Bryan's idea of the government ownership of railroads should The Senator does not seem to remember what the President of the United States himself has said on that subject. The only difference between the President of the United States and Mr. Bryan on that proposition is that Mr. Bryan has said that if government regulation fails government ownership ought to come. The President of the United States has said that if government regulation fails government ownership will have to come. That is the only difference between those two gentlemen on that proposition.

WASHINGTON, SPA SPRING AND GRETTA RAILROAD.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 3668) to authorize the Washington, Spa Spring and Gretta Railroad Company, of Prince George County, to extend its street railway into the District of Columbia. I was about to call it up the other day when the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale] made objection to the immediate consideration of any bill.

ISSUANCE OF LAND PATENTS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. Carter on the 9th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That under the homestead laws of the United States a duly qualified entryman furnishing competent evidence of full compliance with said laws and all rules and regulations promulgated by authority thereof is, in the absence of contest or of any charge or evidence of fraud or mistake, legally entitled to a patent for the land embraced in the entry as to which final proof has been so furnished, and no executive officer is authorized to forbid and prevent the issuance and delivery of such patent delivery of such patent

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, yesterday when I concluded my remarks I was considering the special message of the President of the United States, which was sent to the Senate on December 17, relative to the public lands of the United States and their disposal. I was particularly considering that portion of the message which advised the Senate that the President had suspended the operation of the public-land laws and had directed that the Secretary of the Interior should issue no more patents under any land laws until certain conditions were complied with. I had discussed, first, the right of the President to make this order, and had cited to the Senate the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States to the effect that the operation of a law can not be suspended by an Executive order of the President of the United States or of any other officer of the United States. I had discussed the situation in which this Executive order left the homesteaders upon the public lands of the United States and had drawn the attention of the Senate to the number of persons affected by this order and the manner in which the order did affect their rights.

My attention was called during the discussion of this question to a subsequent order that has been made by the President of the United States, under date of January 25, 1907. This order being only five days old, it had not been called to my attention, This order and it was suggested that it afforded the relief necessary against some of the objections which I urged to the Executive order. have sent for and have a copy of it before me. I find that it does not in any measure meet the next objection that I had intended to urge to the message.

MINING CLAIMS.

I had about concluded the presentation of the facts in regard to homesteaders and was proceeding to take up the question of the mineral lands of the United States when the suggestion came to me that it would not be necessary to consider that phase or portion of the message of December 17 because of the subsequent order of January 25. I find that the order of January 25 affords no adequate relief from the onerous conditions and results of the message of December 17. In the message of December 17 it is provided:

I have directed the Secretary of the Interior to allow no patent to be issued to public land under any law until by an examination on the ground actual compliance with that law has been found to exist. For this purpose an increase of special agents in the General Land Office is urgently required; unless it is given, bona fide would-be settlers will be put to grave inconvenience, or else the fraud will in large part go on. Further, the Secretary of the Interior should be enabled—to employ enough mining experts to examine the validity of all mineral-land claims, and to undertake the supervision and control of the use of the mineral fuels still belonging to the United States.

This is the part-

MINERAL CLAIMS.

I direct the attention of the Senate to that part of the message I have read which refers to mineral claims or includes the location of mining claims, which constitute that portion of the wealth of the country-gold, silver, copper, lead, cinnabar, and that class of metals. I can not conceive of such entire lack of information in regard to the character, the nature, and the necessities surrounding the location of mining claims as to prompt such a declaration. I say it with all due respect to the intention of the President to send no message to the Congress that would not be justified, at least according to the judgment of a portion of the people.

The proposition that the location of a prospector or miner shall be subjected to the scrutiny of an "expert," sent out by any Department of the Government, or from any source whatever, before that claim shall be recognized as having a legal status entitling the owner to possession and the right of development is beyond comprehension. The history of mining should have taught those who are responsible for such a declaration that it was not only impracticable, but that it would result in a complete stagnation of the mining interests of the country. The mines that in this day and in the days past have produced the hundreds of millions of dollars which have been added to the wealth of this country were condemned by the experts of the mining or so-called "mining" world, one after another, until it has become a matter of jest and of ridicule to talk about having the opinion of an expert.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Knox in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.
Mr. CARTER. While the Senator is dwelling upon the output of the mines, I desire to suggest for the RECORD the fact that under our mining laws and regulations as existing since 1848 so happy has been the result that from gold, silver, copper, and lead mines we have produced over $7,000,000,000, added from the mines to the national wealth under the existing system.

Mr. HEYBURN. The product of the mines of the United States in gold and silver has established and maintained the money standard of the world for more than half a century. Without it the world could not have maintained the financial basis of the great nations of the earth to-day, nor could they maintain it. It has supplied the basic principle of finance not only in this country, but in others. Without the product of the mines of the United States in the past and in the future the financial system of the world would have to be changed. It enabled this country to resume specie payment. It furnished a basis of money values at a time when the credit of this nation was subject to the vicissitudes of internal strife. This interest not only has thus contributed to the financial stability of the country, but it employs vast capital and labor at remunerative wages-wages that have not an equal in any other occupation on earth. I am speaking of the precious metals. I can include within that the great copper mines of the world, which have contributed to the development and establishment of the great electrical industry of the world and maintain it to-day and without which it could not be maintained. The mines of that little country embraced within the Pacific coast States to-day maintain the basis upon which the great electrical industries of the world rest.

I pass these questions of economics. They can not be disregarded in considering the importance of the mining industry; but at this time I have it in mind rather to discuss the rights of individuals than the relation which this great industry of combined mining bears to the prosperity of the country.

DEVELOPMENT OF THE MINES OF THE COUNTRY.

Congress enacted laws to promote the development of the mines of the country thirty-five years ago; yes, first in 1866, which gave to a citizen of the United States or a person who had declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States the right to go upon the unappropriated public mineral lands of the United States and select for himself a limited area for his own use and benefit, making the condition precedent simply that he should discover mineral-bearing rock in place before making the location, so far as lode claims are concerned; that he should discover gold in the gravel before making the location, if a placer claim, so far as placer claims are concerned, placer claims being the auriferous gravel of the country bearing this metal, and lode claims being ledges of rock in place in the solid formation of the earth. Congress gave that right absolutely upon the discovery of mineral-bearing rock in place. The only prerequisite to the taking of title was the discovery of mineral-bearing rock in place.

Now, the executive department of the Government would subject the judgment of the prospector to the inspection and approval of an expert. The United States Supreme Court in the case of Harrington v. Chambers settled the question as to what Congress meant when it said that a prospector might make a location whenever he had discovered mineral-bearing rock in place which, in the judgment of the locator, was sufficient to justify him in expending his time and labor in developing the prospect, not in the judgment of some other person, but in the judgment of the prospector. It was attempted in that case, as it has been in others, to interpolate the word "reasonable" in determining the judgment of the prospector. It was contended that it must be such a showing of mineral in the rock as would justify a reasonable man, or a man in the exercise of reasonable judgment, in making the selection; in other words, that it was not the judgment of the prospector that was to determine it, that it was the judgment of some other person than the man who was going to expend his labor and his money upon it.

For years that matter was contested in the courts. Recorded in the decisions not only of State supreme courts, but of the courts of the United States, you will find many decisions with varying conclusions, but in the case of Harrington v. Chambers Supreme Court of the United States said that it was a matter which must rest entirely upon the judgment of the locator; that Congress had based the right upon conditions sufficiently onerous to insure against men locating mining claims and doing the necessary work required by the statute except where they offered some promise of becoming mines.

PROSPECTOR HAS MORE AT STAKE THAN ANYBODY ELSE.

No expert, so far as I know, has ever discovered a paying mine or a prospect that became a paying mine in the history of the United States. No great mine, no prospect that has developed into a great mine, has ever met with the approval of the experts who examined it. I speak not only from the record conceded to represent the facts and the experience, but I speak from a personal observation of nearly thirty years. saw the great mines of Leadville condemned out of hand by the experts from Nevada and California. I saw them afterwards, notwithstanding the blight of the disapproval of those gentlemen, produce hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars. I saw the mines of Idaho, in the great Coeur d'Alene country, condemned by the experts of Leadville and other parts of Colorado and California and Montana, and I have lived in their midst while they have produced more than $400,000,000 in And yet we are confronted with the proposition that before the prospector, who has more at stake than anybody else, shall have a patent his claim shall be examined by a socalled expert. The prospector has at stake his labor and what little capital he has, generally consisting of the pack on his back. He is solicitous to find something that will make him and relieve him against his poverty. Is it likely that he will trifle away his time upon something which in his judgment, at least, does not justify him in locating and developing?

Congress passed in a few sections of a statute a law that was complete in itself, which provided every detail necessary for the exercise of the right of the prospector and miner. The courts construed the law both as to the location, the development, and the necessary steps to be taken to obtain a patent to the claim. The Department in its industry and within the spirit of this order have formulated regulations, accumulating every day, which have resulted in embarrassing the prospector, in embarrassing and adding to the expense of the man who seeks to obtain the title of the United States to a mining claim until to-day the courts are mostly engaged in determining how much of the law is statutory law and how much of it is regulations and rules of the Department.

Now, this order proposes to send, to examine on the ground—it says "on the ground"—an expert wherever application is made for a patent. Just realize for a moment what that means.
The mines lie up in the mountains, oftentimes where the snow covers the ground for six months in the year, where it is found necessary in the fall to equip the mines for a siege against the weather of six or seven months; where men go in in the fall and are not seen again in the haunts of civilization until spring, when the snows are off. During those periods the owners take advantage of the lull in the outside labor connected with the mines to patent their claims.

The law requires that before an application for a patent is filed you must first apply to the United States surveyor-general of the State for an order directed to some mineral surveyor of the United States, authorizing him to make a survey of that plane. That is generally done during the months of the year when the snow is off. It takes some time to perform that part of the work. Then those notes go to the surveyor-general's office, accompanied by plats, made by the deputy mineral surveyor, in triplicate. It requires some time to work up the field notes and make the plat. In the surveyor-general's office they receive attention according to the rush of business in that office, and generally by the time the summer weather is past, the winter approaching, the party finds himself ready to make his application for a patent.

Then, if he has secured the approval of the surveyor-general to his plat and field notes, he files those, together with an abstract of his title, affidavits that the applicants and locators are citizens of the United States, proof that $500 has been expended in labor and improvements upon the claim, and not only that it has been expended, but how it has been expended. This proof must be certified by the United States deputy mineral surveyor who has surveyed the claim. He gives the length of the tunnel or the depth of the shaft, character of the ledge, and discovery, or whatever the work may consist of, which is described not in general terms, but specifically. This goes in with the application for a patent, and every one of those facts and statements is sworn to.

Then the register of the United States land office where the application is filed advertises in the paper designated, which must be the paper published nearest the claim, a copy of the application for a patent, which gives every detail as to the location and the compliance and the ownership of the claim, so that the world is fully advised. In addition to that, an official copy of the application for patent is posted upon the claim in a conspicuous place, ordinarily at the point where the work is being conducted. In addition to that, an official copy of the application is posted in the United States land office, in that room where everybody goes to see who is applying for lands of the United States.

That would seem to be an adequate protection against any surreptitious obtaining of title to the lands of the United States. The plat made by the United States deputy mineral surveyor shows upon its face not only a statement of what the work consists of, but a picture of it, drawn upon the plat. It is on the plat posted in the land office. It is on the plat filed with the application for a patent. Now, where is the opportunity for fraud?

COST OF DEVELOPING A MINING CLAIM.

It is then up to the land officers to determine whether or not that showing constitutes a compliance with the law, such as authorizes the issuance of a patent by the United States Government to the applicant for the mining claim. He has expended on it not only $500, but he must expend on it as much more as represented by the years during which he must expend in labor and improvements not less than $100 a year; and in a majority of the cases where applications for patent for mining claims are made the expenditure amounts to more than $5,000, and often vastly more than that. And yet it is deemed necessary to advise the Congress that an Executive order has been issued prohibiting the completion of the title to these applicants who have performed every act and against whom no protest is filed until the claims can be examined on the ground by an ex-There is not an average of more than six months in the year when the expert, if he were ever so competent, could make an examination of the average claim because of its location and of the weather and of the conditions that surround it.

The average expert comes from where? From the Department in Washington. What test is to be applied to this expert to determine whether or not his judgment or his opinion should weigh more in determining the rights of the parties than these precautionary measures that come, not unofficially or in a careless manner, but through the most careful provision guarding against any possible fraud?

Yet we are told that here in the recorder's office in the city of Washington these claims that have passed even the scrutiny of the Department of the Interior and the General Land Office and the surveyor-general and the local land office are to be held up, and are now held up and suspended until Congress shall make the appropriation that has been asked to provide these experts to examine them. How many would it take? How many experts, think you, would it take to examine the mining claims that are suspended? There were 1,582 suspended mining claims on the 1st day of this month. They accumulate probably at the rate of at least half that many per month. How many experts would it take to go upon the ground and examine those 1,582 claims, and how long would it take to examine them in the snows of winter in the mountains, because mines are nine times out of ten back in the rugged mountains? How soon could these experts be put to work were we to-morrow to make the appropriation necessary for their employment? How soon could they be put into the field to do this work, and how long would it take them to do it?

I say, after having given the matter some consideration, that were Congress to-morrow to provide for the appointment of these experts and the fund to pay them, before the necessary number of experts could be placed in the field a full year would elapse. There would not be a report on a single mine in the United States under twelve months if we were to do it to-morrow; and we will not do it at all, as a matter of fact.

But in the meantime this order is being enforced. The resolution of the Senator from Montana, to which resolution my remarks are addressed, is directed against that order; and we are here to criticise that order, to inquire as to the wisdom of the making of that order. That is our purpose. Does Congress have any higher function to perform during this session than that of protecting these citizens of the United States in the rights that we have undertaken to bestow upon them? Congress, with due respect to its own prerogative and its own dignity and its constitutional obligation, stand by and see the law that it has enacted stayed by the hand of an Executive who, under the Constitution, is bound to execute the will of Congress, whose highest duty it is to execute the will of the people as represented by our enactments? It seems to me that the subject is one which should thoroughly appeal to the interest and attention of every Member of this body and of Congress.

Just a word now as to the provision that was supposed to re-
